

DS 2068

A1
1922

COPY 2

Number 51

PS 2068

.A1

1922

Copy 2

RSIDE LITERATURE SERIES

RIP VAN WINKLE

AND OTHER AMERICAN ESSAYS FROM THE
SKETCH BOOK

BY
WASHINGTON IRVING
New Edition

HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY
BOSTON, NEW YORK, AND CHICAGO
The Riverside Press Cambridge

RIVERSIDE LITERATURE SERIES

Complete Catalogue and Price List free upon application

1. Longfellow's Evangeline.
2. Longfellow's Courtship of Miles Standish.
3. Dramatization of Miles Standish.
4. Whittier's Snow-Bound, etc.
5. Whittier's Mabel Martin.
6. Holmes's Grandmother's Story.
- 7, 8, 9. Hawthorne's Grandfather's Chair.
10. Hawthorne's Biographical Series.
11. Longfellow's Children's Hour, etc.
- 13, 14. Longfellow's Song of Hiawatha.
16. Bayard Taylor's Lars.
- 17, 18. Hawthorne's Wonder-Book.
- 19, 20. Franklin's Autobiography.
21. Franklin's Poor Richard's Almanac, and Other Papers.
- 22, 23. Hawthorne's Tanglewood Tales.
24. Washington's Farewell Addresses, etc.
- 25, 26. Longfellow's Golden Legend.
27. Thoreau's Forest Trees, etc.
28. Burroughs's Birds and Bees.
29. Hawthorne's Little Daffydowndilly, etc.
30. Lowell's Vision of Sir Launfal, etc.
31. Holmes's My Hunt after the Captain, etc.
32. Lincoln's Gettysburg Speech, etc.
- 33-35. Longfellow's Tales of a Wayside Inn.
36. Burroughs's Sharp Eyes, etc.
37. Warner's A-Hunting of the Deer, etc.
38. Longfellow's Building of the Ship, etc.
39. Lowell's Books and Libraries, etc.
40. Hawthorne's Tales of the White Hills.
41. Whittier's Tent on the Beach, etc.
42. Emerson's Fortune of the Republic, etc.
43. Bryant's Ulysses among the Phæacians.
44. Edgeworth's Waste not, Want not, etc.
45. Macaulay's Lays of Ancient Rome.
46. Old Testament Stories.
- 47, 48. Scudder's Fables and Folk Stories.
- 49, 50. Andersen's Stories.
51. Irving's Rip Van Winkle, etc.
52. Irving's The Voyage, etc.
53. Scott's Lady of the Lake.
54. Bryant's Thanatopsis, etc.
55. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
56. Webster's First Bunker Hill Oration.
57. Dickens's Christmas Carol.
58. Dickens's Crickets on the Hearth.
59. Verse and Prose for Beginners in Reading.
- 60, 61. The Sir Roger de Coverley Papers.
62. Fiske's War of Independence.
63. Longfellow's Paul Revere's Ride, etc.
- 64-66. Lambs' Tales from Shakespeare.
67. Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.
68. Goldsmith's Deserted Village, etc.
69. Hawthorne's The Old Manse, etc.
- 70, 71. Selection from Whittier's Child Life.
72. Milton's Minor Poems.
73. Tennyson's Enoch Arden, etc.
74. Gray's Elegy; Cowper's John Gilpin.
75. Scudder's George Washington.
76. Wordsworth's Intimations of Immortality.
77. Burns's Cotter's Saturday Night, etc.
78. Goldsmith's Vicar of Wakefield.
79. Lamb's Old China, etc.
80. Coleridge's Ancient Mariner; Campbell's Lochiel's Warning, etc.
81. Holmes's Autocrat of the Breakfast-Table.
82. Hawthorne's Twice-Told Tales.
83. Eliot's Silas Marner.
84. Dana's Two Years Before the Mast.
85. Hughes's Tom Brown's School Days.
86. Scott's Ivanhoe.
87. Defoe's Robinson Crusoe.
88. Stowe's Uncle Tom's Cabin.
- 89, 90. Swift's Gulliver's Voyages.
91. Hawthorne's House of the Seven Gables.
92. Burroughs's A Bunch of Herbs, etc.
93. Shakespeare's As You Like It.
94. Milton's Paradise Lost. Books I-III.
- 95-98. Cooper's Last of the Mohicans.
99. Tennyson's Coming of Arthur, etc.
100. Burke's Conciliation with the Colonies.
101. Pope's Iliad. Books I, VI, XXII, XXIV.
102. Macaulay's Johnson and Goldsmith.
103. Macaulay's Milton.
104. Macaulay's Addison.
105. Carlyle's Essay on Burns.
106. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
- 107, 108. Grimms' Tales.
109. Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress.
110. De Quincey's Flight of a Tartar Tribe.
111. Tennyson's Princess.
112. Cranch's Æneid. Books I-III.
113. Poems from Emerson.
114. Peabody's Old Greek Folk Stories.
115. Browning's Pied Piper of Hamelin, etc.
116. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
- 117, 118. Stories from the Arabian Nights.
- 119, 120. Poe's Poems and Tales.
121. Speech by Hayne on Foote's Resolution.
122. Speech by Webster in Reply to Hayne.
123. Lowell's Democracy, etc.
124. Aldrich's The Cruise of the Dolphin.
125. Dryden's Palamon and Arcite.
126. Ruskin's King of the Golden River, etc.
127. Keats's Ode on a Grecian Urn, etc.
128. Byron's Prisoner of Chillon, etc.
129. Plato's Judgment of Socrates.
130. Emerson's The Superlative, etc.
131. Emerson's Nature, etc.
132. Arnold's Sohrab and Rustum, etc.
133. Schurz's Abraham Lincoln.
134. Scott's Lay of the Last Minstrel.
135. Chaucer's Prologue.
136. Chaucer's The Knight's Tale, etc.
137. Bryant's Iliad. Bks. I, VI, XXII, XXIV.
138. Hawthorne's The Custom House, etc.
139. Howells's Doorstep Acquaintance, and Other Sketches.
140. Thackeray's Henry Esmond.
142. Ruskin's Sesame and Lilies.
144. Scudder's The Book of Legends.
145. Hawthorne's The Gentle Boy, and Other Tales.
146. Longfellow's Giles Corey.
147. Pope's Rape of the Lock, etc.
148. Hawthorne's Marble Faun.

(See also back covers)

(74)

Washington Irving

The Riverside Literature Series

RIP VAN WINKLE

AND OTHER AMERICAN ESSAYS FROM THE SKETCH BOOK

BY

WASHINGTON IRVING ✓

WITH INTRODUCTION, EXPLANATORY NOTES AND
QUESTIONS AND TOPICS FOR STUDY

✓ New Edition ✓

BOSTON NEW YORK CHICAGO SAN FRANCISCO

HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY

The Riverside Press Cambridge

Copy 2

PS2068
. A1
CONTENTS 1922
copy 21

CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE	iii
BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH OF IRVING	vii
MAP OF THE REGIONS MENTIONED	xviii
RIP VAN WINKLE	7
LEGEND OF SLEEPY HOLLOW	32
PHILIP OF POKANOKET	76
EXPLANATORY NOTES, WITH QUESTIONS AND TOPICS FOR STUDY	i

The selections from "The Sketch Book" included in this number of the Riverside Literature Series are used by permission of, and by arrangement with, Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons, the authorized publishers of Irving's works.

COPYRIGHT, 1922, BY HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY ✓
COPYRIGHT, 1891, BY HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO.

ALL RIGHTS RESERVED

.28 R
©CL.A690122 ✓

The Riverside Press
CAMBRIDGE . MASSACHUSETTS PRINTED IN THE U.S.A.

NOV 13 '22 ✓

me 21

MSB 2 Jan 1923

CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE.
PERIOD COVERED BY IRVING'S LIFE.

CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE.

IRVING'S LIFE AND WORKS.	AMERICAN HISTORY.	AMERICAN LITERATURE.	BRITISH LITERATURE.	EUROPEAN HISTORY.
1783 Born in New York, Apr. 3.	1783 Revolutionary War is terminated by Treaty of Paris, Sept. 3.		1784 Samuel Johnson dies.	George III. king of England (since 1760).
1787	1787 Federal Convention meets at Philadelphia.		1788 Lord Byron born.	1787 Assembly of Notables in France.
1789	1789 Adoption of the Constitution. Washington elected President.	1789 James Fenimore Cooper born.		1789 Meeting of the States General. Beginning of the French Revolution.
1790	1790 Government established at Philadelphia for ten years.	1790 Benjamin Franklin dies.
1792	1792 Whitney's Cotton Gin.	1794 William Cullen Bryant born.	1792 Percy Bysshe Shelley born.	1792 France declared a republic.
	Great increase of negro slavery follows invention of steam spinning and weaving machines.	1796 William H. Prescott born.	1794 Edward Gibbon dies.	1793 Execution of Louis XVI.
	Death of Washington.	1796 John G. Palfrey born.	1796 Robert Burns dies.	1793-94 Reign of Terror in France.
1799	1799 Federal government removed from Philadelphia to Washington.	1800 George Bancroft born.	1797 Edmund Burke dies.	1795-99 Government of the Directory.
1800			1798 Thomas Hood born.	Napoleon Bonaparte becomes prominent.
			1800 William Cowper dies. Thomas Babington Macaulay born.

CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE (continued).
PERIOD COVERED BY IRVING'S LIFE.

IRVING'S LIFE AND WORKS.	AMERICAN HISTORY.	AMERICAN LITERATURE.	BRITISH LITERATURE.	EUROPEAN HISTORY.
1802 Enters law office of Josiah Hoffman. Publishes, in the Morning Chronicle, letters signed "Jonathan Oldstyle."	1801-5 War with Tripoli. Louisiana Purchase.	1803 Ralph Waldo Emerson born.		1799-1804 Government of the Consulate.
1804-6 First voyage to Europe.	1804 Alexander Hamilton dies.	1804 Nathaniel Hawthorne born.		1796-1815 Napoleon First Consul.
1806 Admitted to the bar.				1804-14 Napoleonic Wars.
1807-8 With his brother and Paulding, publishes Salmagundi .	1807 Fulton's steamboat.	H. W. Longfellow born.		Napoleon I. Emperor of the French.
1809 Knickerbocker's New York.	1809 Abraham Lincoln born.	John Greenleaf Whittier born.	1810 Alfred Tennyson born.	Victory of Nelson at Trafalgar.
1810 Enters his brother's business.		Oliver Wendell Holmes born.	1811 William Makepeace Thackeray born.	End of the old German Empire.
1811-15 Edits Analytic Magazine , first called Select Reviews .	1812-14 Second War with England.	Edgar Allan Poe born.	1812 Charles Dickens born.
1814 Serves for four months as Gov. Tompkins' aid and military secretary.	1811-50 Great development of the West.	Harriet Beecher Stowe born.	1812 Robert Browning born.	1813 Battle of Leipsic, "Battle of the Nations," Napoleon exiled to Elba.
		John Lothrop Motley born.		1814 Napoleon exiled to Elba.
		North American Review founded.		1815 Congress of Vienna.

CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE.

1815	Goes abroad, not returning for seven years.	1817	"Era of Good Feeling,"	1817	Henry D. Thoreau born.	1816	Charlotte born.	1815-24	Louis XVIII., king of France. Napoleon escapes from Elba and enters Paris. "The Hundred Days." March 20-June 29. June 18. Battle of Waterloo. Final downfall of Napoleon.
1818	He and his brother fall in business, and he takes up literature as a profession.	1819	Florida bought from Spain.	1819	James Russell Lowell born.	1819	James A. Froude born. John Ruskin born.		George IV., King of England. War of Grecian Independence.
1810-26	Travels on the Continent.			1820	George Eliot born.	1820	George Eliot born.	1815	Charles X., king of France.
1819-20	The Sketch Book.	1820	Missouri Compromise.					1820-30
1822	Tracebridge Hall.	1825	The Erie Canal.	1823	Francis Parkman born.			1821-29
1824	Tales of a Traveller.			1825	Bayard Taylor born.			1824-30
1826-9	Lives in Spain.
1828	Life and Voyages of Columbus.
1829	The Conquest of Grenada.
1829	Appointed Secretary of Legation to Court of St. James.
1830	Receives medal from Royal Society of Literature.	1830-60	Great era of railroad building.
1831	The Companions of Columbus.
1831	Receives D. C. L. from Oxford.							1837-38	William IV., king of England.
1832	The Alhambra.	1831	William Lloyd Garrison establishes The Liberator.					1830-48	Louis Philippe, king of France.
1832	Returns to New York.							1830	Revolution in Belgium.
								1830-32	Revolution in Poland.
1835	The Crayon Miscellanies.			1832	Sir Walter Scott dies.
1836	Astoria			1833	Knickerbocker Magazine founded. Edmund Clarence Stedman born.
				1834	Thomas Moore dies. Samuel Taylor Coleridge dies. Charles Lamb dies.

CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE (Continued).
PERIOD COVERED BY IRVING'S LIFE.

IRVING'S LIFE AND WORKS.	AMERICAN HISTORY.	AMERICAN LITERATURE.	BRITISH LITERATURE.	EUROPEAN HISTORY.
1837 The Adventures of Captain Bonneville.	1838 Steamships begin to cross the Atlantic.	1836 Thomas Bailey Aldrich born. 1837 William Dean Howells born.		1837 Victoria, Queen of England.
1842 Minister to Spain. (His nomination was suggested by Daniel Webster.)		1842 John Fiske born.
1846 Returns to New York for remainder of his life.	1846-7 Mexican War. 1848 Gold discovered in California. Controversy over slavery increases in bitterness.			1846 Repeal of Corn Laws in England. 1848 France second time a republic.
1849 Life of Oliver Goldsmith. 1849 Mahomet and his Successors.	1850 Fugitive Slave Law.		1850 William Wordsworth dies.
1855 Wolfert's Roost. 1855-9 Life of Washington. 1859 Death of Irving.		1852 Daniel Webster and Henry Clay die. 1853 Putnam's Magazine founded. 1857 Atlantic Monthly founded.		1852 Napoleon III., Emperor. 1854-56 Crimean War.
			1859 Henry Hallam dies.

WASHINGTON IRVING.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

WASHINGTON IRVING — “the first ambassador whom the New World of Letters sent to the Old” — was born in New York on April 3, 1783. His mother named him after George Washington, and a pleasant anecdote connects his childhood with the great man whose biographer he was to be in later years. One morning, as his Scotch nurse had him out for a walk, she saw the President enter a shop. The nurse hastened in with her charge, and said: “Please, your honor, here’s a bairn was named for you.” Washington turned and, laying his hand on the child’s head, gave him his blessing.

Born of well-to-do parents, Irving was the youngest of a large family; his formative years were passed under the influence of a cultured home, and with plenty of congenial companionship. The surroundings of his childish days thus were fortunate, and no doubt tended to mould his mind and character for an appreciation of the finer things of life. His boyhood was in no sense remarkable; he was fond of reading, Robinson Crusoe and The Arabian Nights being among his favorite books, while a youthful inclination towards travel and adventure seems to have been stimulated by a History of the Civil Wars of Granada, and stirred still further by a set of voyages called The World Displayed. He attended school until the age of sixteen, when for some reason he declined to complete his education in the normal way by following his two brothers William and Peter to Columbia College; instead, he entered a lawyer’s office.

But the study of the law did not very closely engage his attention; his tastes lay outside the walls of the office. "How wistfully," he wrote afterwards of this period of his life, "would I wander about the pier-heads in fine weather, and watch the parting ships, bound to distant climes; with what longing eyes would I gaze after their lessening sails, and waft myself in imagination to the ends of the earth." These restless cravings were partially satisfied by two journeys — one up the Hudson to Albany; the other north as far as Montreal and Quebec. They were venturous expeditions; discomfort and difficulty were all in the day's work, while dangers came unsought. But Irving from the first inured himself to the hardships inseparable from travel at a time when the voyager was lucky to reach Albany in half a week, and when the journey from New York to Boston occupied six days. He was by nature, and became still more by training, an excellent traveller. "For my own part," he said, "I endeavor to take things as they come, with cheerfulness; when I cannot get a dinner to suit my taste, I endeavor to get a taste to suit my dinner."

Not only did he begin at this time to gratify his desire for travel, but he entered also — tentatively and insecurely — into the field of literature. He wrote a few essays, signed "Jonathan Oldstyle," and published them in a journal owned by his brother Peter. They mildly satirized New York life after the manner of the eighteenth-century essayists in England and show neither more nor less merit than might be expected of a young man of nineteen. Their chief value lies in the fact that they indicate a practical interest in writing.

During his youth, Irving's health had never been very good. With the hope that change might help him, his brothers sent him to Europe, where he spent the years from 1804 to 1806. The experience was a delightful one, despite the delays and difficulties which fell to the lot of the wayfarer by sailing-ship and stage-coach. He visited Sicily and Italy; he wandered leisurely through France, Holland, and England. "The young American traveller" was most cordially received; he possessed a geniality of temper which everywhere won him friends. At the same time, his sagacious powers of observation and his keen sense of humor enabled him to grasp and store up impressions which later were to form the inspiration for much of his writing. He came home again completely restored to health.

The legal studies of his earlier years had been so far successful that soon after his return he was admitted to the bar and taken into partnership with his brother John. It cannot be said, however, that he seriously practised his profession. A little law and a great deal of literature, together with the enjoyment of the society of his native city, carried him comfortably through four years, at the end of which he joined his brothers Ebenezer and Peter in the large hardware importing business which they had built up. There was an understanding that he should be connected with the firm as a "silent" partner, and, while sharing in the profits, should be called upon to do merely a nominal portion of the work. Thus he would have plenty of opportunity to follow his literary tastes, with which his brothers were thoroughly in sympathy. Under this kindly arrangement, he became well-known as a man about town — a man of literary promise and one who had seen the world.

As a result came the publication of Salmagundi, a magazine in which he was associated with James Kirke Paulding and William Irving. It lived for about a year. "Our intention," ran the editorial announcement, "is simply to instruct the young, reform the old, correct the town, and castigate the age." The matter was humorous and original enough, and made a stir in New York; the manner was pleasantly reminiscent of Addison's Spectator papers.

His next venture was the book which established his reputation — A History of New York, by Diedrich Knickerbocker. Intended at first as a parody upon a pompous narrative called A Picture of New York, the History soon outgrew the limits of a mere imitation and developed into a comic history of the city under Dutch rule. The book was heralded by humorous advertisements in the newspapers, which announced the disappearance of "a small elderly gentleman, dressed in an old black coat and cocked hat, called Knickerbocker." He was last seen on the Albany stage, and had left at his lodgings nothing but a "very curious kind of written book," which was to be published to pay his board bill. Introduced in this original way, the History appeared in 1809 and created a sensation. It dealt with characters, places, and situations which were familiar to every New Yorker of the day, it was conceived in a serio-comic vein of amusing irony that piqued the curiosity, and it was written in a style already marked by the distinction afterwards so characteristic of Irving's work. Some of the old families, whose sense of dignity was greater than their sense of humor, felt aggrieved at supposed slights on their ancestors; but the large majority thoroughly enjoyed the unshackled treatment of history and tradition, and the good-humored satire.

While Irving was completing the History, he suffered a loss which deeply influenced his whole life. This was the death of Matilda Hoffman, the young girl to whom he was engaged. Long afterwards when time had soothed — though it could not take away — his sorrow, he wrote: "For years I could not talk on the subject of this hopeless regret; I could not even mention her name; but her image was continually before me, and I dreamt of her incessantly." He never married, he never forgot; and to this ineffaceable grief we may probably trace the touch of melancholy which is seen all through his writings.

We have now to consider the most important period of his life — the seventeen years from 1815 to 1832, which were spent abroad. In 1815 he went to Liverpool to take over the conduct of the English branch of the business from his brother Peter, whose health had broken down. For a time the young author devoted himself to the difficult task of reviving a firm which (through no fault of the Irvings) had fallen on evil days. His efforts — honestly and unsparingly put forth — were in vain; the house failed, and in 1818, thrown upon his own resources, he undertook the duty of helping the brothers who had so generously helped him in the past. A step long contemplated was now forced on him: he went to London to take up literature as a profession.

The decision was a wise one. Not often has a change made necessary by failure in one field been followed so soon by enduring success in another. In 1819 there was published in New York the first number of The Sketch Book, by "Geoffrey Crayon." Six other numbers followed within two years and, in 1821, an edition was issued in England. Its popularity was immediate and lasting; Irving found himself successful beyond his expectations, with his future clearly marked out before him.

It is interesting to note that the English publication of The Sketch Book was made under the kindly auspices of Sir Walter Scott, whom Irving had met at Abbotsford on the occasion of his first journey abroad. Knowing that his American friend had suffered a reverse of fortune, Scott, with practical and characteristic good feeling, offered him a position as editor of a projected magazine in Edinburgh. When Irving declined this appointment, Scott at once entered on other plans. "I am sure of one thing," he wrote, "that you have only to be known to the British public to be admired by them, and I would not say so unless I really was of that opinion. I trust to be in London about the middle of the month, and promise myself great pleasure in again shaking you by the hand." Irving decided to publish on his own account, and did so through an obscure bookseller. The bookseller failed. "At this juncture," says Irving, "Scott arrived in London. I called to him for help, as I was sticking in the mire, and more propitious than Hercules, he put his shoulder to the wheel." A new publisher was quickly found — the best in London — and the Sketch Book, which Scott had termed “positively beautiful,” was safely launched. The whole episode was typical of the generous Scotchman; Irving’s tribute does credit to both the friends:

Thus, under the kind and genial auspices of Sir Walter Scott, I began my literary career in Europe; and I feel that I am but discharging, in a trifling degree, my debt of gratitude to that golden hearted man in acknowledging my indebtedness to him. — But who of his literary contemporaries ever applied to him for aid or comfort that did not experience the most prompt, generous, and effectual assistance?

His next works were Bracebridge Hall and Tales of a Traveller, both published before 1825. The former contains a charming series of sketches of life at an old English country-seat; the latter is a collection of miscellaneous stories, supposed to be told at an inn on the Rhine. Both are “sketch-books,” though neither possesses quite the same merit as the original volume. All three, however, show a style of finished excellence, and the mastery of a new literary form — the short story.

After some ten years abroad, spent chiefly in England, he felt the need for fresh inspiration. From early days the romantic history and the picturesque legends of Spain had appealed to his imagination; he was definitely attracted to Madrid in 1826 by the suggestion that he should translate a Spanish book about Columbus. Attached nominally to the American Legation, he had every opportunity for research. He remained in Spain for three years, and collected material for two histories later published — The Life of Columbus and The Voyages of the Companions of Columbus. “What a country it is for a traveller,” he said, “where the most miserable inn is as full of adventures as an enchanted castle, and every meal is in itself an achievement.”

His interest next was strongly drawn to the part played by the Moors in Spanish history. The Conquest of Granada tells the story of the ten years’ war between the Moors and the Spaniards, which led to the downfall of the Moorish dominion after seven centuries. Another book, Tales of the Alhambra, grew out of a three months' residence in the Alhambra, the ancient fortified palace of the Moorish kings; an experience which gave him great delight. "Here I am, nestled in one of the most remarkable, romantic, and delicious spots in the world. It absolutely appears to me like a dream, or as if I am spell-bound in some fairy palace." These feelings beautifully color the Tales of the Alhambra, which form a Spanish sketch book, steeped in the atmosphere of old romance.

In spite of his preoccupation with literary work, Irving's position at the Legation in Madrid would seem to have been more than a sinecure, for in 1829 he was appointed Secretary to the American Legation in London. He was welcomed in England with the friendliness which he everywhere commanded — "he came amongst us," says Thackeray, "bringing the kindest sympathy, the most artless, smiling goodwill." And more than friendliness awaited him. The Royal Society of Literature presented him with a gold medal, and Oxford University conferred the Degree of D.C.L. — highest in its gift — in recognition of his accomplishment as a writer. It is pleasant to know that with all the fame of these years there had come also moderate wealth; he was now in comfortable circumstances and his invalid brother was provided for.

He returned to New York in 1832, and was greeted with tributes of admiration and affection which were sorely trying to a man of his natural modesty. Many changes had come about during his long absence. New York had grown almost out of his knowledge. The West had been widely explored and settled. Eager to see the new lands beyond the Mississippi — an unknown wilderness in the days of his youth — he joined a Government Commission to the Indian tribes of the great plains. His experiences are recounted in A Tour of the Prairies.

Upon coming back from the West he purchased a small farm on the Hudson near Tarrytown and Sleepy Hollow. The place with its old stone cottage he named "Sunnyside," and realized at last after so many years of roving the desire which he had expressed long ago: "If ever I should wish for a retreat whither I might steal from the world and its distractions, and dream quietly away the remnant of a troubled life, I know of none more promising than this little valley." Here for some years he enjoyed a life of "lettered ease," a loved and honored figure. He published Legends of the Conquest of Spain, and Recollections of Abbotsford and Newstead Abbey — the latter giving his memories of Scott and Byron — and edited The Journal of Captain Bonneville and Astoria, an account of the attempt of John Jacob Astor to found a settlement at the mouth of the Columbia River. He was interested, too, in The Knickerbocker Magazine, founded in 1832 by Charles Fenno Hoffman, and the forerunner of Harper's and The Century. Among its contributors, beside Irving, were Bryant, Halleck, Willis, Boker and Bayard Taylor, a notable group of writers who formed what is often spoken of as the "Knickerbocker School."

A letter written by Charles Dickens about this time reflects very justly the fame and personality of Irving.

MY DEAR SIR,

There is no man in the world who could have given me the heartfelt pleasure you have, by your kind note of the thirteenth of last month. There is no living writer, and there are very few among the dead, whose approbation I should feel so proud to earn. And with everything you have written upon my shelves, and in my thoughts, and in my heart of hearts, I may honestly and truly say so. If you could know how earnestly I write this, you would be glad to read it — as I hope you will be, faintly guessing at the warmth of the hand I autographically hold out to you over the broad Atlantic.

I wish I could find in your welcome letter some hint of an intention to visit England. . . . I should love to go with you — as I have gone, God knows how often — into Little Britain, and Eastcheap, and Green Arbour Court, and Westminster Abbey. I should like to travel with you, outside the last of the coaches down to Bracebridge

Hall. It would make my heart glad to compare notes with you . . . about all those delightful places and people that I used to walk about and dream of in the daytime, when a very small and not over-particularly-taken-care-of little boy. I have . . . much to hear concerning Moorish legend, and poor unhappy Boabdil. Diedrich Knickerbocker I have worn to death in my pocket, and yet I should show you his mutilated carcass with a joy past all expression.

My dear Washington Irving, I cannot thank you enough for your cordial and generous praise, or tell you what deep and lasting gratification it has given me.

When Dickens made his first visit to America in 1842, the two men met. "Washington Irving is a great fellow," wrote the brilliant young novelist. "We have laughed most heartily together. He is just the man he ought to be."

The quiet life at Sunnyside was at last broken in upon. With Irving's intimate knowledge of European affairs, it was only natural that he should be called on for further diplomatic service. In 1842 he received appointment as Minister to Spain. The position came unsought; he had already refused several other offers of civic or national responsibility. But the call seemed imperative; he possessed, moreover, a close acquaintance with Spanish life and enjoyed the friendliest relations with the Spanish people. He accepted the post, therefore, and during the next four years discharged his duties with marked success at a period of considerable political unrest.

Thirteen years remained to him, which were passed happily at Sunnyside — the peaceful closing of a long and fortunate career. Up to the very end his pen was busy. He published in 1849 a Life of Goldsmith, and in 1850 Mahomet and his Successors, the last of the studies in subjects connected with Spanish history which had so strongly engaged his interest. Wolfert's Roost, a collection of occasional sketches, appeared in 1855. The monumental Life of Washington, which he himself regarded as his greatest contribution to the literature of his country, was completed in four volumes, the last appearing in the year of his death. He died at his home on the Hudson on November 28, 1859.

Map of the Regions mentioned in
RIP VAN WINKLE,
 THE
LEGEND OF SLEEPY HOLLOW, AND
PHILIP OF POKANOKET.

INTRODUCTION TO RIP VAN WINKLE.

THE story of Rip Van Winkle purported to have been written by Diedrich Knickerbocker, who was a humorous invention of Irving's, and whose name was familiar to the public as the author of A History of New York. The History was published in 1809, but it was ten years more before the first number of The Sketch Book of Geoffrey Crayon, Gent., was published. This number, which contained Rip Van Winkle, was, like succeeding numbers, written by Irving in England and sent home to America for publication. He laid the scene of the story in the Kaatskills, but he drew upon his imagination and the reports of others for the scenery, not visiting the spot until 1833. The story is not absolutely new; the fairy tale of The Sleeping Beauty in the Wood has the same theme; so has the story of Epimenides of Crete, who lived in the sixth or seventh century before Christ. He was said to have fallen asleep in a cave when a boy, and to have awaked at the end of fifty-seven years, his soul, meanwhile, having been growing in stature. There is the legend also of the Seven Sleepers of Ephesus, Christian martyrs who were walled into a cave to which they had fled for refuge, and there were miraculously preserved for two centuries. Among the stories in which the Harz Mountains of Germany are so prolific is one of Peter Klaus, a goatherd who was accosted one day by a young man who silently beckoned him to follow, and led him to a secluded spot, where he found twelve knights playing, voiceless, at skittles. He saw a can of wine which was very fragrant, and, drinking of it, was thrown into a deep sleep, from which he did not wake for twenty years. The story gives incidents of his awaking and of the changes which he found in the village to which he returned. This story, which was published with others in 1800, may very likely have been the immediate suggestion to Irving, who has taken nearly the same framework. The humorous additions which he has made, and the grace with which he has invested the tale, have caused his story to supplant earlier ones in the popular mind, so that Rip Van Winkle has passed into familiar speech, and allusions to him are clearly understood by thousands who have never read Irving's story. The recent dramatizing of the story, though following the outline only, has done much to fix the conception of the character. The story appeals very directly to a common sentiment of curiosity as to the future, which is not far removed from what some have regarded as an instinct of the human mind pointing to personal immortality. The name Van Winkle was happily chosen by Irving, but not invented by him. The printer of the Sketch Book, for one, bore the name. The name Knickerbocker, also, is among the Dutch names, but Irving's use of it has made it representative. In The Author's Apology, which he prefixed to a new edition of the History of New York, he says: "I find its very name become a 'household word,' and used to give the home stamp to everything recommended for popular acceptance, such as Knickerbocker societies; Knickerbocker insurance companies; Knickerbocker steamboats; Knickerbocker omnibuses, Knickerbocker bread, and Knickerbocker ice; and . . . New Yorkers of Dutch descent priding themselves upon being 'genuine Knickerbockers.'"

RIP VAN WINKLE.

A POSTHUMOUS WRITING OF DIEDRICH KNICKERBOCKER.

By Woden, God of Saxons,
From whence comes Wensday, that is Wodensday.
Truth is a thing that ever I will keep Unto thylke day in which I creep into My sepulchre.

CARTWRIGHT.¹

THE following tale was found among the papers of the late Diedrich Knickerbocker, an old gentleman of New York, who was very curious in the Dutch history of the province, and the manners of the descendants from its primitive settlers. His historical researches, however, did not lie so much among books as among men; for the former are lamentably scanty on his favorite topics; whereas he found the old burghers, and still more their wives, rich in that legendary lore so invaluable to true history. Whenever, therefore, he happened upon a genuine Dutch family, snugly shut up in its low-roofed farmhouse under a spreading sycamore, he looked upon it as a little clasped volume of black-letter, and studied it with the zeal of a book-worm.

The result of all these researches was a history of the province during the reign of the Dutch governors, which he published some years since. There have been various opinions as to the literary character of his work, and, to tell the truth, it is not a whit better than it should be. Its chief merit is its scrupulous accuracy, which indeed was a little questioned on its first appearance, but has since been completely established; and it is now admitted into all historical collections, as a book of unquestionable authority.

The old gentleman died shortly after the publication of his work, and now that he is dead and gone, it cannot do much harm to his memory¹ to say that his time might have been much better employed in weightier labors. He, however, was apt to ride his hobby his own way ; and though it did now and then kick up the dust a little in the eyes of his neighbors, and grieve the spirit of some friends, for whom he felt the truest deference and affection ; yet his errors and follies are remembered “ more in sorrow than in anger,” and it begins to be suspected that he never intended to injure or offend. But however his memory may be appreciated by critics, it is still held dear by many folk, whose good opinion is worth having ; particularly by certain biscuit-bakers, who have gone so far as to imprint his likeness on their new-year cakes ;² and have thus given him a chance for immortality, almost equal to the being stamped on a Waterloo Medal, or a Queen Anne’s Farthing.³

¹ William Cartwright, 1611-1643, was a friend and disciple of Ben Jonson.

¹ The History of New York had given offence to many old New Yorkers because of its saucy treatment of names which were held in veneration as those of founders of families, and its general burlesque of Dutch character. Among the critics was a warm friend of Irving, Gulian C. Verplanck, who in a discourse before the New York Historical Society plainly said : “ It is painful to see a mind, as admirable for its exquisite perception of the beautiful as it is for its quick sense of the ridiculous, wasting the richness of its fancy on an ungrateful theme, and its exuberant humor in a coarse caricature.” Irving took the censure good-naturedly, and as he read Verplanck’s words just as he was finishing the story of Rip Van Winkle, he gave them this playful notice in the introduction.

² An oblong seed-cake, still made in New York at New Year’s time, and of Dutch origin.

³ There was a popular story that only three farthings were struck in Queen Anne’s reign ; that two were in public keeping, and that the third was no one knew where, but that its lucky finder would be able to hold it at an enormous price. As a matter of fact there were eight coinings of farthings in the reign of Queen Anne, and numismatists do not set a high value on the piece.

WHSOEVER has made a voyage up the Hudson must remember the Kaatskill Mountains. They are a dismembered branch of the great Appalachian family, and are seen away to the west of the river, swelling up to a noble height, and lording it over the surrounding country. Every change of season, every change of weather, indeed, every hour of the day, produces some change in the magical hues and shapes of these mountains, and they are regarded by all the good wives, far and near, as perfect barometers. When the weather is fair and settled, they are clothed in blue and purple, and print their bold outlines on the clear evening sky; but sometimes when the rest of the landscape is cloudless they will gather a hood of gray vapors about their summits, which, in the last rays of the setting sun, will glow and light up like a crown of glory.

At the foot of these fairy¹ mountains, the voyager may have descried the light smoke curling up from a village, whose shingle-roofs gleam among the trees, just where the blue tints of the upland melt away into the fresh green of the nearer landscape. It is a little village of great antiquity, having been founded by some of the Dutch colonists in the early time of the province, just about the beginning of the government of the good Peter Stuyvesant,² (may he rest in peace!) and there were some of the houses of the original settlers standing within a few years, built of small yellow bricks brought from Holland, having latticed windows and gable fronts, surmounted with weathercocks.

¹ A light touch to help the reader into a proper spirit for receiving the tale.

² Stuyvesant was governor of New Netherlands from 1647 to 1664. He plays an important part in Knickerbocker's History of New York, as he did in actual life. Until quite recently a pear tree was shown on the Bowery, said to have been planted by him.

In that same village, and in one of these very houses (which, to tell the precise truth, was sadly time-worn and weather-beaten), there lived many years since, while the country was yet a province of Great Britain, a simple, good-natured fellow, of the name of Rip Van Winkle. He was a descendant of the Van Winkles who figured so gallantly in the chivalrous days of Peter Stuyvesant, and accompanied him to the siege of Fort Christina.¹ He inherited, however, but little of the martial character of his ancestors. I have observed that he was a simple, good-natured man; he was, moreover, a kind neighbor, and an obedient hen-pecked husband. Indeed, to the latter circumstance might be owing that meekness of spirit which gained him such universal popularity; for those men are most apt to be obsequious and conciliating abroad, who are under the discipline of shrews at home. Their tempers, doubtless, are rendered pliant and malleable in the fiery furnace of domestic tribulation; and a curtain lecture is worth all the sermons in the world for teaching the virtues of patience and long-suffering. A termagant wife may, therefore, in some respects be considered a tolerable blessing, and if so, Rip Van Winkle was thrice blessed.

Certain it is, that he was a great favorite among all the good wives of the village, who, as usual with the amiable sex, took his part in all family squabbles; and never failed, whenever they talked those matters

¹ The Van Winkles appear in the illustrious catalogue of heroes who accompanied Stuyvesant to Fort Christina, and were

“Brimful of wrath and cabbage.”

See History of New York, book VI. chap. viii.

over in their evening gossipings, to lay all the blame on Dame Van Winkle. The children of the village, too, would shout with joy whenever he approached. He assisted at their sports, made their playthings, taught them to fly kites and shoot marbles, and told them long stories of ghosts, witches, and Indians. Whenever he went dodging about the village, he was surrounded by a troop of them, hanging on his skirts, clambering on his back, and playing a thousand tricks on him with impunity; and not a dog would bark at him throughout the neighborhood.

The great error in Rip's composition was an insuperable aversion to all kinds of profitable labor. It could not be from the want of assiduity or perseverance; for he would sit on a wet rock, with a rod as long and heavy as a Tartar's lance, and fish all day without a murmur, even though he should not be encouraged by a single nibble. He would carry a fowling-piece on his shoulder for hours together, trudging through woods and swamps, and up hill and down dale, to shoot a few squirrels or wild pigeons. He would never refuse to assist a neighbor, even in the roughest toil, and was a foremost man at all country frolics for husking Indian corn, or building stone-fences; the women of the village, too, used to employ him to run their errands, and to do such little odd jobs as their less obliging husbands would not do for them. In a word, Rip was ready to attend to anybody's business but his own; but as to doing family duty, and keeping his farm in order, he found it impossible.

In fact, he declared it was of no use to work on his farm; it was the most pestilent little piece of ground in the whole country; everything about it went wrong, and would go wrong, in spite of him. His fences were continually falling to pieces ; his cow would either go astray or get among the cabbages ; weeds were sure to grow quicker in his fields than anywhere else ; the rain always made a point of setting in just as he had some out-door work to do ; so that though his patrimonial estate had dwindled away under his management, acre by acre, until there was little more left than a mere patch of Indian corn and potatoes, yet it was the worst-conditioned farm in the neighborhood.

His children, too, were as ragged and wild as if they belonged to nobody. His son Rip, an urchin begotten in his own likeness, promised to inherit the habits, with the old clothes of his father. He was generally seen trooping like a colt at his mother's heels, equipped in a pair of his father's cast-off galligaskins, which he had much ado to hold up with one hand, as a fine lady does her train in bad weather.

Rip Van Winkle, however, was one of those happy mortals, of foolish, well-oiled dispositions, who take the world easy, eat white bread or brown, whichever can be got with least thought or trouble, and would rather starve on a penny than work for a pound. If left to himself, he would have whistled life away in perfect contentment ; but his wife kept continually dinning in his ears about his idleness, his carelessness, and the ruin he was bringing on his family. Morning, noon, and night her tongue was incessantly going, and everything he said or did was sure to produce a torrent of household eloquence. Rip had but one way of replying to all lectures of the kind, and that, by frequent use, had grown into a habit. He shrugged his shoulders, shook his head, cast up his eyes, but said nothing. This, however, always provoked a fresh volley from his wife; so that he was fain to draw off his forces, and take to the outside of the house — the only side which, in truth, belongs to a henpecked husband.

Rip's sole domestic adherent was his dog Wolf, who was as much henpecked as his master; for Dame Van Winkle regarded them as companions in idleness, and even looked upon Wolf with an evil eye, as the cause of his master's going so often astray. True it is, in all points of spirit befitting an honorable dog, he was as courageous an animal as ever scoured the woods — but what courage can withstand the ever-during and all-besetting terrors of a woman's tongue? The moment Wolf entered the house his crest fell, his tail drooped to the ground, or curled between his legs, he sneaked about with a gallows air, casting many a side-long glance at Dame Van Winkle, and at the least flourish of a broomstick or ladle he would fly to the door with yelping precipitation.

Times grew worse and worse with Rip Van Winkle as years of matrimony rolled on; a tart temper never mellows with age, and a sharp tongue is the only edged tool that grows keener with constant use. For a long while he used to console himself, when driven from home, by frequenting a kind of perpetual club of the sages, philosophers, and other idle personages of the village; which held its sessions on a bench before a small inn, designated by a rubicund portrait of His Majesty George the Third. Here they used to sit in the shade through a long lazy summer's day, talking listlessly over village gossip, or telling endless sleepy stories about nothing. But it would have been worth any statesman's money to have heard the profound discussions that sometimes took place, when by chance an old newspaper fell into their hands from some passing traveller. How solemnly they would listen to the contents, as drawled out by Derrick Van Bummel, the school-master, a dapper learned little man, who was not to be daunted by the most gigantic word in the dictionary; and how sagely they would deliberate upon public events some months after they had taken place.

The opinions of this junto were completely controlled by Nicholas Vedder, a patriarch of the village, and landlord of the inn, at the door of which he took his seat from morning till night, just moving sufficiently to avoid the sun and keep in the shade of a large tree; so that the neighbors could tell the hour by his movements as accurately as by a sun-dial. It is true he was rarely heard to speak, but smoked his pipe incessantly. His adherents, however (for every great man has his adherents), perfectly understood him, and knew how to gather his opinions. When anything that was read or related displeased him, he was observed to smoke his pipe vehemently, and to send forth short, frequent and angry puffs; but when pleased, he would inhale the smoke slowly and tranquilly, and emit it in light and placid clouds; and sometimes, taking the pipe from his mouth, and letting the fragrant vapor curl about his nose, would gravely nod his head in token of perfect approbation.

From even this stronghold the unlucky Rip was at length routed by his termagant wife, who would suddenly break in upon the tranquillity of the assemblage and call the members all to naught; nor was that august personage, Nicholas Vedder himself, sacred from the daring tongue of this terrible virago, who charged him outright with encouraging her husband in habits of idleness.

Poor Rip was at last reduced almost to despair; and his only alternative, to escape from the labor of the farm and clamor of his wife, was to take gun in hand and stroll away into the woods. Here he would sometimes seat himself at the foot of a tree, and share the contents of his wallet with Wolf, with whom he sympathized as a fellow-sufferer in persecution. "Poor Wolf," he would say, "thy mistress leads thee a dog's life of it; but never mind, my lad, whilst I live thou shalt never want a friend to stand by thee!" Wolf would wag his tail, look wistfully in his master's face, and if dogs can feel pity I verily believe he reciprocated the sentiment with all his heart.

In a long ramble of the kind on a fine autumnal day, Rip had unconsciously scrambled to one of the highest parts of the Kaatskill Mountains. He was after his favorite sport of squirrel shooting, and the still solitudes had echoed and reëchoed with the reports of his gun. Panting and fatigued, he threw himself, late in the afternoon, on a green knoll, covered with mountain herbage, that crowned the brow of a precipice. From an opening between the trees he could overlook all the lower country for many a mile of rich woodland. He saw at a distance the lordly Hudson, far, far below him, moving on its silent but majestic course, with the reflection of a purple cloud, or the sail of a lagging bark, here and there sleeping on its glassy bosom, and at last losing itself in the blue highlands.

On the other side he looked down into a deep mountain glen, wild, lonely, and shagged, the bottom filled with fragments from the impending cliffs, and scarcely lighted by the reflected rays of the setting sun. For some time Rip lay musing on this scene; evening was gradually advancing; the mountains began to throw their long blue shadows over the valleys; he saw that it would be dark long before he could reach the village, and he heaved a heavy sigh when he thought of encountering the terrors of Dame Van Winkle.

As he was about to descend, he heard a voice from a distance, hallooing, "Rip Van Winkle! Rip Van Winkle!" He looked round, but could see nothing but a crow winging its solitary flight across the mountain. He thought his fancy must have deceived him, and turned again to descend, when he heard the same cry ring through the still evening air: "Rip Van Winkle! Rip Van Winkle!" — at the same time Wolf bristled up his back, and giving a low growl, skulked to his master's side, looking fearfully down into the glen. Rip now felt a vague apprehension stealing over him; he looked anxiously in the same direction, and perceived a strange figure slowly toiling up the rocks, and bending under the weight of something he carried on his back. He was surprised to see any human being in this lonely and unfrequented place; but supposing it to be some one of the neighborhood in need of his assistance, he hastened down to yield it.

On nearer approach he was still more surprised at the singularity of the stranger's appearance. He was a short, square-built old fellow, with thick bushy hair, and a grizzled beard. His dress was of the antique Dutch fashion: a cloth jerkin strapped round the waist, several pair of breeches, the outer one of ample volume, decorated with rows of buttons down the sides, and bunches at the knees. He bore on his shoulder a stout keg, that seemed full of liquor, and made signs for Rip to approach and assist him with the load. Though rather shy and distrustful of this new acquaintance, Rip complied with his usual alac rity; and mutually relieving one another, they clambered up a narrow gully, apparently the dry bed of a mountain torrent. As they ascended, Rip every now and then heard long rolling peals like distant thunder, that seemed to issue out of a deep ravine, or rather cleft, between lofty rocks, toward which their rugged path conducted. He paused for a moment, but supposing it to be the muttering of one of those transient thunder-showers which often take place in mountain heights, he proceeded. Passing through the ravine, they came to a hollow, like a small amphitheatre, surrounded by perpendicular precipices, over the brinks of which impending trees shot their branches, so that you only caught glimpses of the azure sky and the bright evening cloud. During the whole time Rip and his companion had labored on in silence; for though the former marvelled greatly what could be the object of carrying a keg of liquor up this wild mountain, yet there was something strange and incomprehensible about the unknown, that inspired awe and checked familiarity.

On entering the amphitheatre, new objects of wonder presented themselves. On a level spot in the centre was a company of odd-looking personages playing at ninepins. They were dressed in a quaint outlandish fashion; some wore short doublets, others jerkins, with long knives in their belts, and most of them had enormous breeches of similar style with that of the guide's. Their visages, too, were peculiar; one had a large beard, broad face, and small piggish eyes; the face of another seemed to consist entirely of nose, and was surmounted by a white sugar-loaf hat, set off with a little red cock's tail. They all had beards, of various shapes and colors. There was one who seemed to be the commander. He was a stout old gentleman, with a weather-beaten countenance; he wore a laced doublet, broad belt and hanger, high-crowned hat and feather, red stockings, and high-heeled shoes, with roses in them. The whole group reminded Rip of the figures in an old Flemish painting in the parlor of Dominie Van Shaick, the village parson, which had been brought over from Holland at the time of the settlement.

What seemed particularly odd to Rip was, that though these folks were evidently amusing themselves, yet they maintained the gravest faces, the most mysterious silence, and were, withal, the most melancholy party of pleasure he had ever witnessed. Nothing interrupted the stillness of the scene but the noise of the balls, which, whenever they were rolled, echoed along the mountains like rumbling peals of thunder.

As Rip and his companion approached them, they suddenly desisted from their play, and stared at him with such fixed, statue-like gaze, and such strange, uncouth, lack-lustre countenances, that his heart turned within him, and his knees smote together. His companion now emptied the contents of the keg into large flagons, and made signs to him to wait upon the company. He obeyed with fear and trembling; they quaffed the liquor in profound silence, and then returned to their game.

By degrees Rip's awe and apprehension subsided. He even ventured, when no eye was fixed upon him, to taste the beverage, which he found had much of the flavor of excellent Hollands. He was naturally a thirsty soul, and was soon tempted to repeat the draught. One taste provoked another; and he reiterated his visits to the flagon so often that at length his senses were overpowered, his eyes swam in his head, his head gradually declined, and he fell into a deep sleep.

On waking, he found himself on the green knoll whence he had first seen the old man of the glen. He rubbed his eyes — it was a bright, sunny morning. The birds were hopping and twittering among the bushes, and the eagle was wheeling aloft, and breasting the pure mountain breeze. “Surely,” thought Rip, “I have not slept here all night.” He recalled the occurrences before he fell asleep. The strange man with a keg of liquor — the mountain ravine — the wild retreat among the rocks — the woe-begone party at nine-pins — the flagon — “Oh! that flagon! that wicked flagon!” thought Rip — “what excuse shall I make to Dame Van Winkle?”

He looked round for his gun, but in place of the clean, well-oiled fowling-piece, he found an old fire-lock lying by him, the barrel incrustated with rust, the lock falling off, and the stock worm-eaten. He now suspected that the grave roisters of the mountain had put a trick upon him, and, having dosed him with liquor, had robbed him of his gun. Wolf, too, had disappeared, but he might have strayed away after a squirrel or partridge. He whistled after him, and shouted his name, but all in vain; the echoes repeated his whistle and shout, but no dog was to be seen.

He determined to revisit the scene of the last evening’s gambol, and if he met with any of the party, to demand his dog and gun. As he rose to walk, he found himself stiff in the joints, and wanting in his usual activity. “These mountain beds do not agree with me,” thought Rip, “and if this frolic should lay me up with a fit of the rheumatism, I shall have a blessed time with Dame Van Winkle." With some difficulty he got down into the glen; he found the gully up which he and his companion had ascended the preceding evening; but to his astonishment a mountain stream was now foaming down it, leaping from rock to rock, and filling the glen with babbling murmurs. He, however, made shift to scramble up its sides, working his toilsome way through thickets of birch, sassafras, and witch-hazel, and sometimes tripped up or entangled by the wild grapevines that twisted their coils or tendrils from tree to tree, and spread a kind of network in his path.

At length he reached to where the ravine had opened through the cliffs to the amphitheatre; but no traces of such opening remained. The rocks presented a high, impenetrable wall, over which the torrent came tumbling in a sheet of feathery foam, and fell into a broad, deep basin, black from the shadows of the surrounding forest. Here, then, poor Rip was brought to a stand. He again called and whistled after his dog; he was only answered by the cawing of a flock of idle crows, sporting high in air about a dry tree that overhung a sunny precipice; and who, secure in their elevation, seemed to look down and scoff at the poor man's perplexities. What was to be done? the morning was passing away, and Rip felt famished for want of his breakfast. He grieved to give up his dog and gun; he dreaded to meet his wife; but it would not do to starve among the mountains. He shook his head, shouldered the rusty firelock, and, with a heart full of trouble and anxiety, turned his steps homeward.

As he approached the village he met a number of people, but none whom he knew, which somewhat surprised him, for he had thought himself acquainted with every one in the country round. Their dress, too, was of a different fashion from that to which he was accustomed. They all stared at him with equal marks of surprise, and whenever they cast their eyes upon him, invariably stroked their chins. The constant recurrence of this gesture induced Rip, involuntarily, to do the same, when, to his astonishment, he found his beard had grown a foot long!

He had now entered the skirts of the village. A troop of strange children ran at his heels, hooting after him, and pointing at his gray beard. The dogs, too, not one of which he recognized for an old acquaintance, barked at him as he passed. The very village was altered; it was larger and more populous. There were rows of houses which he had never seen before, and those which had been his familiar haunts had disappeared. Strange names were over the doors — strange faces at the windows, — everything was strange. His mind now misgave him; he began to doubt whether both he and the world around him were not bewitched. Surely this was his native village, which he had left but the day before. There stood the Kaatskill Mountains — there ran the silver Hudson at a distance — there was every hill and dale precisely as it had always been — Rip was sorely perplexed — “That flagon last night,” thought he, “has saddled my poor head sadly!”

It was with some difficulty that he found the way to his own house, which he approached with silent awe, expecting every moment to hear the shrill voice of Dame Van Winkle. He found the house gone to decay — the roof fallen in, the windows shattered, and the doors off the hinges. A half-starved dog that looked like Wolf was skulking about it. Rip called him by name, but the cur snarled, showed his teeth, and passed on. This was an unkind cut indeed — “My very dog,” sighed poor Rip, “has forgotten me!”

He entered the house, which, to tell the truth, Dame Van Winkle had always kept in neat order. It was empty, forlorn, and apparently abandoned. This desolateness overcame all his connubial fears — he called loudly for his wife and children — the lonely chambers rang for a moment with his voice, and then again all was silence.

He now hurried forth, and hastened to his old resort, the village inn — but it, too, was gone. A large, rickety wooden building stood in its place, with great gaping windows, some of them broken and mended with old hats and petticoats, and over the door was painted, “The Union Hotel, by Jonathan Doolittle.” Instead of the great tree that used to shelter the quiet little Dutch inn of yore, there now was reared a tall naked pole, with something on the top that looked like a red night-cap, and from it was fluttering a flag, on which was a singular assemblage of stars and stripes — all this was strange and incomprehensible. He recognized on the sign, however, the ruby face of King George, under which he had smoked so many a peaceful pipe; but even this was singularly metamorphosed. The red coat was changed for one of blue and buff, a sword was held in the hand instead of a sceptre, the head was decorated with a cocked hat, and underneath was painted in large characters, GENERAL WASHINGTON.

There was, as usual, a crowd of folk about the door, but none that Rip recollected. The very character of the people seemed changed. There was a busy, bustling, disputatious tone about it, instead of the accustomed phlegm and drowsy tranquillity. He looked in vain for the sage Nicholas Vedder, with his broad face, double chin, and fair long pipe, uttering clouds of tobacco-smoke instead of idle speeches; or Van Bummel, the school-master, doling forth the contents of an ancient newspaper. In place of these, a lean, bilious-looking fellow, with his pockets full of hand-bills, was haranguing vehemently about rights of citizens — elections — members of congress — liberty — Bunker's Hill — heroes of seventy-six — and other words, which were a perfect Babylonish jargon to the bewildered Van Winkle.

The appearance of Rip, with his long grizzled beard, his rusty fowling-piece, his uncouth dress, and an army of women and children at his heels, soon attracted the attention of the tavern-politicians. They crowded round him, eying him from head to foot with great curiosity. The orator bustled up to him, and, drawing him partly aside, inquired "on which side he voted?" Rip started in vacant stupidity. Another short but busy little fellow pulled him by the arm, and, rising on tiptoe, inquired in his ear, "Whether he was Federal or Democrat?" Rip was equally at a loss to comprehend the question; when a knowing, self-important old gentleman, in a sharp cocked hat, made his way through the crowd, putting them to the right and left with his elbows as he passed, and planting himself before Van Winkle, with one arm akimbo, the other resting on his cane, his keen eyes and sharp hat penetrating, as it were, into his very soul, demanded in an austere tone, "what brought him to the election with a gun on his shoulder, and a mob at his heels, and whether he meant to breed a riot in the village?" — "Alas! gentlemen," cried Rip, somewhat dismayed, "I am a poor quiet man, a native of the place, and a loyal subject of the king, God bless him!"

Here a general shout burst from the bystanders — "A tory! a tory! a spy! a refugee! hustle him! away with him!" It was with great difficulty that the self-important man in the cocked hat restored order; and, having assumed a tenfold austerity of brow, demanded again of the unknown culprit what he came there for, and whom he was seeking? The poor man humbly assured him that he meant no harm, but merely came there in search of some of his neighbors, who used to keep about the tavern.

"Well — who are they? — name them."

Rip bethought himself a moment, and inquired, "Where's Nicholas Vedder?"

There was a silence for a little while, when an old man replied, in a thin, piping voice: "Nicholas Vedder! why, he is dead and gone these eighteen years! There was a wooden tombstone in the churchyard that used to tell all about him, but that's rotten and gone too."

"Where's Brom Dutcher?"

"Oh, he went off to the army in the beginning of the war; some say he was killed at the storming of Stony Point¹ — others say he was drowned in a squall at the foot of Antony's Nose.² I don't know — he never came back again."

¹ On the Hudson. The place is famous for the daring assault made by Mad Anthony Wayne, July 15, 1779.

² A few miles above Stony Point is the promontory of Antony's Nose. If we are to believe Diedrich Knickerbocker, it

“Where’s Van Bummel, the school-master?”

“He went off to the wars too, was a great militia general, and is now in Congress.”

Rip’s heart died away at hearing of these sad changes in his home and friends, and finding himself thus alone in the world. Every answer puzzled him too, by treating of such enormous lapses of time, and of matters which he could not understand: war — Congress — Stony Point; he had no courage to ask after any more friends, but cried out in despair, “Does nobody here know Rip Van Winkle?”

“Oh, Rip Van Winkle!” exclaimed two or three, “Oh, to be sure! that’s Rip Van Winkle yonder, leaning against the tree.”

Rip looked, and beheld a precise counterpart of himself, as he went up the mountain: apparently as lazy, and certainly as ragged. The poor fellow was now completely confounded. He doubted his own identity, and whether he was himself or another man.

was named after Antony Van Corlear, Stuyvesant’s trumpeter. “It must be known, then, that the nose of Antony the trumpeter was of a very lusty size, strutting boldly from his countenance like a mountain of Golconda. . . . Now thus it happened, that bright and early in the morning the good Antony, having washed his burly visage, was leaning over the quarter railing of the galley, contemplating it in the glassy wave below. Just at this moment the illustrious sun, breaking in all his splendor from behind a high bluff of the highlands, did dart one of his most potent beams full upon the refulgent nose of the sounder of brass — the reflection of which shot straightway down, hissing hot, into the water and killed a mighty sturgeon that was sporting beside the vessel! . . . When this astonishing miracle came to be made known to Peter Stuyvesant he . . . marvelled exceedingly; and as a monument thereof, he gave the name of Antony’s Nose to a stout promontory in the neighborhood, and it has continued to be called Antony’s Nose ever since that time.” History of New York, book VI. chap. iv.

In the midst of his bewilderment, the man in the cocked hat demanded who he was, and what was his name?

"God knows," exclaimed he, at his wit's end; "I'm not myself — I'm somebody else — that's me yonder — no — that's somebody else got into my shoes — I was myself last night, but I fell asleep on the mountain, and they've changed my gun, and everything's changed, and I'm changed, and I can't tell what's my name, or who I am!"

The bystanders began now to look at each other nod, wink significantly, and tap their fingers against their foreheads. There was a whisper, also, about securing the gun, and keeping the old fellow from doing mischief, at the very suggestion of which the self-important man in the cocked hat retired with some precipitation. At this critical moment a fresh, comely woman pressed through the throng to get a peep at the gray-bearded man. She had a chubby child in her arms, which, frightened at his looks, began to cry. "Hush, Rip," cried she, "hush, you little fool; the old man won't hurt you." The name of the child, the air of the mother, the tone of her voice, all awakened a train of recollections in his mind. "What is your name, my good woman?" asked he.

"Judith Gardenier."

"And your father's name?"

"Ah, poor man, Rip Van Winkle was his name, but it's twenty years since he went away from home with his gun, and never has been heard of since, — his dog came home without him; but whether he shot himself, or was carried away by the Indians, nobody can tell. I was then but a little girl."

Rip had but one question more to ask; and he put it with a faltering voice: —

“Where’s your mother?”

“Oh, she too had died but a short time since; she broke a blood-vessel in a fit of passion at a New England peddler.”

There was a drop of comfort at least, in this intelligence. The honest man could contain himself no longer. He caught his daughter and her child in his arms. “I am your father!” cried he — “Young Rip Van Winkle once — old Rip Van Winkle now! Does nobody know poor Rip Van Winkle?”

All stood amazed, until an old woman tottering out from among the crowd, put her hand to her brow, and peering under it in his face for a moment, exclaimed, “Sure enough it is Rip Van Winkle — it is himself! Welcome home again, old neighbor — Why, where have you been these twenty long years?”

Rip’s story was soon told, for the whole twenty years had been to him but as one night. The neighbors stared when they heard it; some were seen to wink at each other, and put their tongues in their cheeks; and the self-important man in the cocked hat, who when the alarm was over, had returned to the field, screwed down the corners of his mouth, and shook his head — upon which there was a general shaking of the head throughout the assemblage.

It was determined, however, to take the opinion of old Peter Vanderdonk, who was seen slowly advancing up the road. He was a descendant of the historian of that name,¹ who wrote one of the earliest accounts of the province. Peter was the most ancient inhabitant of the village, and well versed in all the wonderful events and traditions of the neighborhood. He recollected Rip at once, and corroborated his story in the most satisfactory manner. He assured the company that it was a fact, handed down from his ancestor the historian, that the Kaatskill Mountains had always been haunted by strange beings. That it was affirmed that the great Hendrick Hudson, the first discoverer of the river and country, kept a kind of vigil there every twenty years, with his crew of the Half-moon; being permitted in this way to revisit the scenes of his enterprise, and keep a guardian eye upon the river and the great city called by his name. That his father had once seen them in their old Dutch dresses playing at ninepins in a hollow of the mountain; and that he himself had heard, one summer afternoon, the sound of their balls like distant peals of thunder.

¹ Adrian Vanderdonk.

To make a long story short, the company broke up, and returned to the more important concerns of the election. Rip's daughter took him home to live with her; she had a snug well-furnished house, and a stout cheery farmer for a husband, whom Rip recollected for one of the urchins that used to climb upon his back. As to Rip's son and heir, who was the ditto of himself, seen leaning against the tree, he was employed to work on the farm; but evinced an hereditary disposition to attend to anything else but his business.

Rip now resumed his old walks and habits; he soon found many of his former cronies, though all rather the worse for the wear and tear of time; and preferred making friends among the rising generation, with whom he soon grew into great favor.

Having nothing to do at home, and being arrived at that happy age when a man can be idle with impunity, he took his place once more on the bench at the inn door, and was revered as one of the patriarchs of the village, and a chronicle of the old times "before the war." It was some time before he could get into the regular track of gossip, or could be made to comprehend the strange events that had taken place during his torpor. How that there had been a revolutionary war — that the country had thrown off the yoke of old England — and that, instead of being a subject of his Majesty George the Third, he was now a free citizen of the United States. Rip, in fact, was no politician; the changes of states and empires made but little impression on him; but there was one species of despotism under which he had long groaned, and that was — petticoat government. Happily that was at an end; he had got his neck out of the yoke of matrimony, and could go in and out whenever he pleased, without dreading the tyranny of Dame Van Winkle. Whenever her name was mentioned, however, he shook his head, shrugged his shoulders, and cast up his eyes, which might pass either for an expression of resignation to his fate, or joy at his deliverance.

He used to tell his story to every stranger that arrived at Mr. Doolittle's hotel. He was observed, at first, to vary on some points every time he told it, which was, doubtless, owing to his having so recently awaked. It at last settled down precisely to the tale I have related, and not a man, woman, or child in the neighborhood but knew it by heart. Some always pretended to doubt the reality of it, and insisted that Rip had been out of his head, and that this was one point on which he always remained flighty. The old Dutch inhabitants, however, almost universally gave it full credit. Even to this day they never hear a thunder-storm of a summer afternoon about the Kaatskill, but they say Hendrick Hudson and his crew are at their game of ninepins ; and it is a common wish of all henpecked husbands in the neighborhood, when life hangs heavy on their hands, that they might have a quieting draught out of Rip Van Winkle's flagon.

NOTE.

The foregoing Tale, one would suspect, had been suggested to Mr. Knickerbocker by a little German superstition about the Emperor Frederick der Rothbart,¹ and the Kypphaüser mountain ; the subjoined note, however, which he had appended to the tale, shows that it is an absolute fact, narrated with his usual fidelity.

“The story of Rip Van Winkle may seem incredible to many, but nevertheless I give it my full belief, for I know the vicinity of our old Dutch settlements to have been very subject to marvellous events and appearances. Indeed, I have heard many stranger stories than this, in the villages along the Hudson ; all of which were too well authenticated to admit of a doubt. I have even talked with Rip Van Winkle myself, who, when last I saw him, was a very old venerable man, and so perfectly rational and consistent on every other point, that I think no conscientious person could refuse to take this into the bargain ; nay, I have seen a certificate on the subject taken before a country justice and signed with a cross, in the justice's own handwriting. The story therefore, is beyond the possibility of doubt.

“D. K.”

POSTSCRIPT.

The following are travelling notes from a memorandum-book of Mr. Knickerbocker :—

The Kaatsberg, or Catskill Mountains, have always been a region full of fable. The Indians considered them the abode of spirits, who influenced the weather, spreading sunshine or clouds over the landscape, and sending good or bad hunting seasons. They were ruled by an old squaw spirit, said to be their mother. She dwelt on the highest peak of the Catskills, and had charge of the doors of day and night to open and shut them at the proper hour. She hung up the new moons in the skies, and cut up the old ones into stars. In times of drought, if properly propitiated, she would spin light summer clouds out of cobwebs and morning dew, and send them off from the crest of the mountain, flake after flake, like flakes of carded cotton, to float in the air ; until, dissolved by the heat of the sun, they would fall in gentle showers, causing the grass to spring, the fruits to ripen, and the corn to grow an inch an hour. If displeased, however, she would brew up clouds black as ink, sitting in the midst of them like a bottle-bellied spider in the midst of its web ; and when these clouds broke, woe betide the valleys !

¹ Frederick I. of Germany, 1121–1190, called Barbarossa, der Rothbart (Redbeard or Rufus), was fabled not to have died but to have gone into a long sleep, from which he would awake when Germany should need him. The same legend was told by the Danes of their Holger.

In old times, say the Indian traditions, there was a kind of Manitou or Spirit, who kept about the wildest recesses of the Catskill Mountains, and took a mischievous pleasure in wreaking all kinds of evils and vexations upon the red men. Sometimes he would assume the form of a bear, a panther, or a deer, lead the bewildered hunter a weary chase through tangled forest and among ragged rocks ; and then spring off with a loud ho ! ho ! leaving him aghast on the brink of a beetling precipice or raging torrent.

The favorite abode of this Manitou is still shown. It is a great rock or cliff on the loneliest part of the mountains, and from the flowering vines which clamber about it, and the wild flowers which abound in its neighborhood, is known by the name of the Garden Rock. Near the foot of it is a small lakè, the haunt of the solitary bittern, with water-snakes basking in the sun on the leaves of the pond-lilies which lie on the surface. This place was held in great awe by the Indians, insomuch that the boldest hunter would not pursue his game within its precincts. Once upon a time, however, a hunter, who had lost his way, penetrated to the Garden Rock, where he beheld a number of gourds placed in the crotches of trees. One of these he seized and made off with it, but in the hurry of his retreat he let it fall among the rocks, when a great stream gushed forth, which washed him away and swept him down precipices, where he was dashed to pieces, and the stream made its way to the Hudson, and continues to flow to the present day ; being the identical stream known by the name of the Kaaters-kill.

THE LEGEND OF SLEEPY HOLLOW.

FOUND AMONG THE PAPERS OF THE LATE DIÉDRICH KNICKERBOCKER.

A pleasing land of drowsy head it was,
Of dreams that wave before the half-shut eye ;
And of gay castles in the clouds that pass,
Forever flushing round a summer sky.

*Castle of Indolence.*¹

IN the bosom of one of those spacious coves which indent the eastern shore of the Hudson, at that broad expansion of the river denominated by the ancient Dutch navigators the Tappan Zee,² and where they always prudently shortened sail and implored the protection of St. Nicholas³ when they crossed, there lies a small market town or rural port, which by some is called Greensburgh, but which is more generally and properly known by the name of Tarry Town. This name was given, we are told, in former days, by the good housewives of the adjacent country, from the inveterate propensity of their husbands to linger about the village tavern on market days. Be that as it may, I do not vouch for the fact, but merely advert to it, for the sake of being precise and authentic. Not far from this village, perhaps about two miles, there is a little valley or rather lap of land among high hills, which is one of the quietest places in the whole world. A small brook glides through it, with just murmur enough to lull one to repose; and the occasional whistle of a quail or tapping of a woodpecker is almost the only sound that ever breaks in upon the uniform tranquillity.

¹ An exquisite poem by James Thomson, an English poet, who lived from 1700 to 1748. In it he describes a beautiful palace with groves and lawns and flowery beds, where everything ministers to the ease and luxury of its lotus-eating inmates. He seems to have gathered his materials from Tasso, an Italian poet of the sixteenth century, and his inspiration from Spenser, an English poet of the same century and the author of The Faerie Queene.

² The "Mediterranean" of the river, as Irving was pleased to call it, about ten miles long and four wide.

³ The patron saint of children, also of sailors. Tradition says that he was bishop of Myra in Lydia, and died in 326 A. D. He is revered by the young as the bearer of gifts on Christmas eve. The Dutch know him as Santa Claus (or Klaus). Irving alludes to him frequently in his humorous History of New York.

I recollect that, when a stripling, my first exploit in squirrel-shooting was in a grove of tall walnut-trees that shades one side of the valley. I had wandered into it at noontime, when all nature is peculiarly quiet, and was startled by the roar of my own gun, as it broke the Sabbath stillness around and was prolonged and reverberated by the angry echoes. If ever I should wish for a retreat¹ whither I might steal from the world and its distractions, and dream quietly away the remnant of a troubled life, I know of none more promising than this little valley.

From the listless repose of the place, and the peculiar character of its inhabitants, who are descendants from the original Dutch settlers, this sequestered glen has long been known by the name of SLEEPY

¹ Irving subsequently bought the little stone cottage where the Van Tassels were said to have lived, enlarged and improved it, and gave it the name of Sunnyside. Here he spent his declining years, thus gratifying the wish implied in the text.

HOLLOW, and its rustic lads are called the Sleepy Hollow Boys throughout all the neighboring country. A drowsy, dreamy influence seems to hang over the land, and to pervade the very atmosphere. Some say that the place was bewitched by a High German doctor, during the early days of the settlement; others, that an old Indian chief, the prophet or wizard of his tribe, held his powwows there before the country was discovered by Master Hendrick Hudson.¹ Certain it is, the place still continues under the sway of some witching power, that holds a spell over the minds of the good people, causing them to walk in a continual reverie. They are given to all kinds of marvelous beliefs; are subject to trances and visions, and frequently see strange sights, and hear music and voices in the air. The whole neighborhood abounds with local tales, haunted spots, and twilight superstitions; stars shoot and meteors glare oftener across the valley than in any other part of the country, and the night-mare, with her whole ninefold,² seems to make it the favorite scene of her gambols.

The dominant spirit, however, that haunts this enchanted region, and seems to be commander-in-chief of all the powers of the air, is the apparition of a figure on horseback, without a head. It is said by some to be the ghost of a Hessian trooper, whose head had been carried away by a cannon-ball, in some nameless battle during the Revolutionary War, and who is ever and anon seen by the country folk hurrying along in the gloom of night, as if on the wings of the wind. His haunts are not confined to the valley, but extend at times to the adjacent roads, and especially to the vicinity of a church¹ at no great distance. Indeed, certain of the most authentic historians of those parts, who have been careful in collecting and collating the floating facts concerning this spectre, allege that the body of the trooper having been buried in the churchyard, the ghost rides forth to the scene of battle in nightly quest of his head, and that the rushing speed with which he sometimes passes along the Hollow, like a midnight blast, is owing to his being belated, and in a hurry to get back to the churchyard before daybreak.

¹ More commonly known as Henry Hudson. He was an eminent English navigator, who, while seeking a northwest passage to India, discovered the river and the bay that bears his name, the former in 1609 and the latter in 1610. In 1611 a mutinous crew forced him and eight men into a small boat and abandoned them to their fate. They were never heard of afterwards.

² "He met the night-mare and her nine-fold." — King Lear.

Such is the general purport of this legendary superstition, which has furnished materials for many a wild story in that region of shadows; and the spectre is known at all the country firesides, by the name of the Headless Horseman of Sleepy Hollow.

It is remarkable that the visionary propensity I have mentioned is not confined to the native inhabitants of the valley, but is unconsciously imbibed by every one who resides there for a time. However wide awake they may have been before they entered that sleepy region, they are sure, in a little time, to inhale the witching influence of the air, and begin to grow imaginative, to dream dreams, and see apparitions.

I mention this peaceful spot with all possible laud; for it is in such little retired Dutch valleys, found here and there embosomed in the great State of New York, that population, manners, and customs remain fixed, while the great torrent of migration and improvement, which is making such incessant changes in other parts of this restless country, sweeps by them unobserved. They are like those little nooks of still water, which border a rapid stream, where we may see the straw and bubble riding quietly at anchor, or slowly revolving in their mimic harbor, undisturbed by the rush of the passing current. Though many years have elapsed since I trod the drowsy shades of Sleepy Hollow, yet I question whether I should not still find the same trees and the same families vegetating in its sheltered bosom.

¹ This little Dutch church, which was built in 1699, is said to be still standing

In this by-place of nature there abode, in a remote period of American history, that is to say, some thirty years since, a worthy wight of the name of Ichabod Crane, who sojourned, or, as he expressed it, "tarried," in Sleepy Hollow, for the purpose of instructing the children of the vicinity. He was a native of Connecticut, a State which supplies the Union with pioneers for the mind as well as for the forest, and sends forth yearly its legions of frontier woodmen and country schoolmasters. The cognomen of Crane was not inapplicable to his person. He was tall, but exceedingly lank, with narrow shoulders, long arms and legs, hands that dangled a mile out of his sleeves, feet that might have served for shovels, and his whole frame most loosely hung together. His head was small, and flat at top, with huge ears, large green glassy eyes, and a long snipe nose, so that it looked like a weathercock perched upon his spindle neck to tell which way the wind blew. To see him striding along the profile of a hill on a windy day, with his clothes bagging and fluttering about him, one might have mistaken him for the genius of famine descending upon the earth, or some scarecrow eloped from a cornfield.

His schoolhouse was a low building of one large room, rudely constructed of logs; the windows partly glazed, and partly patched with leaves of old copy-books. It was most ingeniously secured at vacant hours, by a withe twisted in the handle of the door, and stakes set against the window shutters; so that though a thief might get in with perfect ease, he would find some embarrassment in getting out,—an idea most probably borrowed by the architect, Yost Van Houten, from the mystery of an eel-pot.¹ The schoolhouse stood in a rather lonely but pleasant situation, just at the foot of a woody hill, with a brook running close by, and a formidable birch-tree growing at one end of it. From hence the low murmur of his pupils' voices, conning over their lessons, might be heard in a drowsy summer's day, like the hum of a beehive; interrupted now and then by the authoritative voice of the master, in the tone of menace or command; or, peradventure, by the appalling sound of the birch, as he urged some tardy loiterer along the flowery path of knowledge. Truth to say, he was a conscientious man, and ever bore in mind the golden maxim, "Spare the rod and spoil the child."² Ichabod Crane's scholars certainly were not spoiled.

I would not have it imagined, however, that he was one of those cruel potentates of the school who joy in the smart of their subjects; on the contrary, he administered justice with discrimination rather than

¹ A trap for catching eels, its funnel-shaped aperture favoring their entrance but thwarting their escape.

² The thought, but not the wording, is from the Bible, as the following quotations show:—

"He that spareth his rod hateth his son."—Prov. xiii. 24.

"Love is a boy by poets styl'd ;

Then spare the rod and spoil the child."—Butler's Hudibras.

severity; taking the burden off the backs of the weak, and laying it on those of the strong. Your mere puny stripling, that winced at the least flourish of the rod, was passed by with indulgence; but the claims of justice were satisfied by inflicting a double portion on some little tough, wrong-headed, broad-skirted Dutch urchin, who sulked and swelled and grew dogged and sullen beneath the birch. All this he called "doing his duty by their parents;" and he never inflicted a chastisement without following it by the assurance, so consolatory to the smarting urchin, that "he would remember it and thank him for it the longest day he had to live."

When school hours were over, he was even the companion and playmate of the larger boys; and on holiday afternoons would convoy some of the smaller ones home, who happened to have pretty sisters, or good housewives for mothers, noted for the comforts of the cupboard. Indeed, it behooved him to keep on good terms with his pupils. The revenue arising from his school was small, and would have been scarcely sufficient to furnish him with daily bread, for he was a huge feeder, and, though lank, had the dilating powers of an anaconda; but to help out his maintenance, he was, according to country custom in those parts, boarded and lodged at the houses of the farmers whose children he instructed. With these he lived successively a week at a time, thus going the rounds of the neighborhood, with all his worldly effects tied up in a cotton handkerchief.

That all this might not be too onerous on the purses of his rustic patrons, who are apt to consider the costs of schooling a grievous burden, and schoolmasters as mere drones, he had various ways of rendering himself both useful and agreeable. He assisted the farmers occasionally in the lighter labors of their farms, helped to make hay, mended the fences, took the horses to water, drove the cows from pasture, and cut wood for the winter fire. He laid aside, too, all the dominant dignity and absolute sway with which he lorded it in his little empire, the school, and became wonderfully gentle and ingratiating. He found favor in the eyes of the mothers by petting the children, particularly the youngest; and like the lion bold, which whilom so magnanimously the lamb did hold,¹ he would sit with a child on one knee, and rock a cradle with his foot for whole hours together.

In addition to his other vocations, he was the singing-master of the neighborhood, and picked up many bright shillings by instructing the young folks in psalmody. It was a matter of no little vanity to him on Sundays, to take his station in front of the church gallery, with a band of chosen singers; where, in his own mind, he completely carried away the palm from the parson. Certain it is, his voice resounded far above all the rest of the congregation; and there are peculiar quavers still to be heard in that church, and which may even be heard half a mile off, quite to the opposite side of the mill-pond, on a still Sunday morning, which are said to be legitimately descended

¹ In the New England Primer, almost the only juvenile book in the early schools of this country, occurs the following rude couplet:—

“The Lion bold
The Lamb doth hold.”

A coarse woodcut, representing a lion with his paw resting lovingly (!) on a lamb, accompanies the rhymes; and the main object seems to be to impress indelibly on the learner's mind the letter L.

from the nose of Ichabod Crane. Thus, by divers little makeshifts, in that ingenious way which is commonly denominated "by hook and by crook," the worthy pedagogue got on tolerably enough, and was thought, by all who understood nothing of the labor of headwork, to have a wonderfully easy life of it.

The schoolmaster is generally a man of some importance in the female circle of a rural neighborhood; being considered a kind of idle, gentlemanlike personage, of vastly superior taste and accomplishments to the rough country swains, and, indeed, inferior in learning only to the parson. His appearance, therefore, is apt to occasion some little stir at the tea-table of a farmhouse, and the addition of a supernumerary dish of cakes or sweetmeats, or, peradventure, the parade of a silver teapot. Our man of letters, therefore, was peculiarly happy in the smiles of all the country damsels. How he would figure among them in the churchyard, between services on Sundays! gathering grapes for them from the wild vines that overran the surrounding trees; reciting for their amusement all the epitaphs on the tombstones; or sauntering, with a whole bevy of them, along the banks of the adjacent mill-pond; while the more bashful country bumpkins hung sheepishly back, envying his superior elegance and address.

From his half-itinerant life, also, he was a kind of traveling gazette, carrying the whole budget of local gossip from house to house, so that his appearance was always greeted with satisfaction. He was, moreover, esteemed by the women as a man of great erudition, for he had read several books quite through, and was a perfect master of Cotton Mather's¹ "History of

¹ Cotton Mather was a New England clergyman, son of

New England Witchcraft," in which, by the way, he most firmly and potently believed.

He was, in fact, an odd mixture of small shrewdness and simple credulity. His appetite for the marvelous, and his powers of digesting it, were equally extraordinary; and both had been increased by his residence in this spell-bound region. No tale was too gross or monstrous for his capacious swallow. It was often his delight, after his school was dismissed in the afternoon, to stretch himself on the rich bed of clover bordering the little brook that whimpered by his school-house, and there con over old Mather's direful tales, until the gathering dusk of evening made the printed page a mere mist before his eyes. Then, as he wended his way by swamp and stream and awful woodland, to the farmhouse where he happened to be quartered, every sound of nature, at that witching hour, fluttered his excited imagination, — the moan of the whip-poor-will from the hillside, the boding cry of the tree toad, that harbinger of storm, the dreary hooting of the screech owl, to the sudden rustling in the thicket of birds frightened from their roost. The fireflies, too, which sparkled most vividly in the darkest places, now and then startled him, as one of uncommon brightness would stream across his path; and if, by chance, a huge blockhead of a beetle came winging his blundering flight against him, the poor varlet was ready to give up the ghost, with the idea Increase Mather and grandson of John Cotton. He was born in Boston in 1663, graduated at Harvard College in 1684, and ordained minister in Boston the same year. He was a diligent and prolific student, his various publications numbering nearly four hundred. Like most persons of his time, he believed in the existence of witches, and thought he was doing God's service in hunting them down. He died in 1728.

that he was struck with a witch's token. His only resource on such occasions, either to drown thought or drive away evil spirits, was to sing psalm tunes; and the good people of Sleepy Hollow, as they sat by their doors of an evening, were often filled with awe at hearing his nasal melody, "in link'd sweetness long drawn out,"¹ floating from the distant hill, or along the dusky road.

Another of his sources of fearful pleasure was to pass long winter evenings with the old Dutch wives, as they sat spinning by the fire, with a row of apples roasting and spluttering along the hearth, and listen to their marvelous tales of ghosts and goblins, and haunted fields, and haunted brooks, and haunted bridges, and haunted houses, and particularly of the headless horseman, or Galloping Hessian of the Hollow, as they sometimes called him. He would delight them equally by his anecdotes of witchcraft, and of the direful omens and portentous sights and sounds in the air, which prevailed in the earlier times of Connecticut; and would frighten them woefully with speculations upon comets and shooting stars; and with the alarming fact that the world did absolutely turn round, and that they were half the time topsy-turvy!

But if there was a pleasure in all this, while snugly cuddling in the chimney corner of a chamber that was all of a ruddy glow from the crackling wood fire, and where, of course, no spectre dared to show its face, it was dearly purchased by the terrors of his subsequent walk homewards. What fearful shapes and shadows beset his path, amidst the dim and ghastly glare of a snowy night! With what wistful look did he eye every trembling ray of light streaming across the waste fields from some distant window! How often was he appalled by some shrub covered with snow, which, like a sheeted spectre, beset his very path! How often did he shrink with curdling awe at the sound of his own steps on the frosty crust beneath his feet; and dread to look over his shoulder, lest he should behold some uncouth being tramping close behind him! and how often was he thrown into complete dismay by some rushing blast, howling among the trees, in the idea that it was the Galloping Hessian on one of his nightly scourings!

¹ From Milton's L'Allegro.

All these, however, were mere terrors of the night, phantoms of the mind that walk in darkness; and though he had seen many spectres in his time, and been more than once beset by Satan¹ in divers shapes, in his lonely perambulations, yet daylight put an end to all these evils; and he would have passed a pleasant life of it, in spite of the Devil and all his works, if his path had not been crossed by a being that causes more perplexity to mortal man than ghosts, goblins, and the whole race of witches put together, and that was — a woman.

Among the musical disciples who assembled, one evening in each week, to receive his instructions in psalmody, was Katrina Van Tassel, the daughter and only child of a substantial Dutch farmer. She was a blooming lass of fresh eighteen; plump as a partridge; ripe and melting and rosy-cheeked as one of her father's peaches, and universally famed, not merely for her beauty, but her vast expectations. She was withal a little of a coquette, as might be perceived even in her dress, which was a mixture of ancient and modern fashions, as most suited to set off her charms. She wore the ornaments of pure yellow gold, which her great-great-grandmother had brought over from Saardam ;¹ the tempting stomacher of the olden time, and withal a provokingly short petticoat, to display the prettiest foot and ankle in the country round.

¹ An allusion to the old and widespread belief that ghosts, goblins, and witches were the obedient subjects and emissaries of the Evil One.

Ichabod Crane had a soft and foolish heart towards the sex ; and it is not to be wondered at, that so tempting a morsel soon found favor in his eyes, more especially after he had visited her in her paternal mansion. Old Baltus Van Tassel was a perfect picture of a thriving, contented, liberal-hearted farmer. He seldom, it is true, sent either his eyes or his thoughts beyond the boundaries of his own farm ; but within those everything was snug, happy and well-conditioned. He was satisfied with his wealth, but not proud of it ; and piqued himself upon the hearty abundance, rather than the style in which he lived. His stronghold was situated on the banks of the Hudson, in one of those green, sheltered, fertile nooks in which the Dutch farmers are so fond of nestling. A great elm tree spread its broad branches over it, at the foot of which bubbled up a spring of the softest and sweetest water, in a little well formed of a barrel ; and then stole sparkling away through the grass, to a neighboring brook, that babbled along among alders and dwarf willows. Hard by the farmhouse was a vast barn, that might have served for a church : every window and crevice of which seemed bursting forth with the treasures of the farm ; the flail was busily resounding within it from morning to night ; swallows and martins skimmed twittering about the eaves ; and rows of pigeons, some with one eye turned up, as if watching the weather, some with their heads under their wings or buried in their bosoms, and others swelling, and cooing, and bowing about their dames, were enjoying the sunshine on the roof. Sleek unwieldy porkers were grunting in the repose and abundance of their pens, from whence sallied forth, now and then, troops of sucking pigs, as if to snuff the air. A stately squadron of snowy geese were riding in an adjoining pond, convoying whole fleets of ducks ; regiments of turkeys were gobbling through the farmyard, and Guinea fowls fretting about it, like ill-tempered housewives, with their peevish, discontented cry. Before the barn door strutted the gallant cock, that pattern of a husband, a warrior and a fine gentleman, clapping his burnished wings and crowing in the pride and gladness of his heart, — sometimes tearing up the earth with his feet, and then generously calling his ever-hungry family of wives and children to enjoy the rich morsel which he had discovered.

¹ Also known as Zaandam, a town of Holland about five miles from Amsterdam, historically famous as the place where Peter the Great of Russia worked as a shipwright and learned how to build ships.

The pedagogue's mouth watered as he looked upon this sumptuous promise of luxurious winter fare. In his devouring mind's eye, he pictured to himself every roasting-pig running about with a pudding in his belly, and an apple in his mouth ; the pigeons were snugly put to bed in a comfortable pie, and tucked in with a coverlet of crust ; the geese were swimming in their own gravy ; and the ducks pairing cosily in dishes, like snug married couples, with a decent competency of onion sauce. In the porkers he saw carved out the future sleek side of bacon, and juicy relishing ham; not a turkey but he beheld daintily trussed up, with its gizzard under its wing, and, peradventure, a necklace of savory sausages; and even bright chanticleer himself lay sprawling on his back, in a side dish, with uplifted claws, as if craving that quarter which his chivalrous spirit disdained to ask while living.

As the enraptured Ichabod fancied all this, and as he rolled his great green eyes over the fat meadow lands, the rich fields of wheat, of rye, of buckwheat, and Indian corn, and the orchards burdened with ruddy fruit, which surrounded the warm tenement of Van Tassel, his heart yearned after the damsel who was to inherit these domains, and his imagination expanded with the idea, how they might be readily turned into cash, and the money invested in immense tracts of wild land, and shingle palaces in the wilderness. Nay, his busy fancy already realized his hopes, and presented to him the blooming Katrina, with a whole family of children, mounted on the top of a wagon loaded with household trumpery, with pots and kettles dangling beneath; and he beheld himself bestriding a pacing mare, with a colt at her heels, setting out for Kentucky, Tennessee,¹ — or the Lord knows where!

When he entered the house, the conquest of his heart was complete. It was one of those spacious farmhouses, with high-ridged but lowly sloping roofs, built in the style handed down from the first Dutch settlers; the low projecting eaves forming a piazza along the front, capable of being closed up in bad weather. Under this were hung flails, harness, various utensils of husbandry, and nets for fishing in the neighboring river. Benches were built along the sides for summer use ; and a great spinning-wheel at one end, and a churn at the other, showed the various uses to which this important porch might be devoted. From this piazza the wondering Ichabod entered the hall, which formed the centre of the mansion, and the place of usual residence. Here rows of resplendent pewter, ranged on a long dresser, dazzled his eyes. In one corner stood a huge bag of wool, ready to be spun ; in another, a quantity of linsey-woolsey just from the loom ; ears of Indian corn, and strings of dried apples and peaches, hung in gay festoons along the walls, mingled with the gaud of red peppers ; and a door left ajar gave him a peep into the best parlor, where the claw-footed chairs and dark mahogany tables shone like mirrors ; andirons, with their accompanying shovel and tongs, glistened from their covert of asparagus tops ; mock-oranges and conch-shells decorated the mantelpiece ; strings of various-colored birds' eggs were suspended above it ; a great ostrich egg was hung from the centre of the room, and a corner cupboard, knowingly left open, displayed immense treasures of old silver and well-mended china.

¹ At the time the Sketch Book, which contains the Legend of Sleepy Hollow, was published (1819), the far West that emigrants made their goal was east of the Mississippi.

From the moment Ichabod laid his eyes upon these regions of delight, the peace of his mind was at an end, and his only study was how to gain the affections of the peerless daughter of Van Tassel. In this enterprise, however, he had more real difficulties than generally fell to the lot of a knight-errant of yore,¹ who seldom had anything but giants, enchanters, fiery dragons, and such like easily conquered adversaries, to contend with; and had to make his way merely through gates of iron and brass, and walls of adamant to the castle keep, where the lady of his heart was confined; all which he achieved as easily as a man would carve his way to the centre of a Christmas pie; and then the lady gave him her hand as a matter of course. Icha-bcd, on the contrary, had to win his way to the heart of a country coquette, beset with a labyrinth of whims and caprices, which were forever presenting new difficulties and impediments; and he had to encounter a host of fearful adversaries of real flesh and blood, the numerous rustic admirers, who beset every portal to her heart, keeping a watchful and angry eye upon each other, but ready to fly out in the common cause against any new competitor.

¹ A good type of the hero Irving had in mind may be found in Don Quixote, the wandering knight whom Spanish Cervantes immortalized in his inimitable Don Quixote de la Mancha (1605).

Among these, the most formidable was a burly, roaring, roystering blade, of the name of Abraham, or, according to the Dutch abbreviation, Brom Van Brunt, the hero of the country round, which rang with his feats of strength and hardihood. He was broad-shouldered and double-jointed, with short curly black hair, and a bluff but not unpleasant countenance, having a mingled air of fun and arrogance. From his Herculean frame and great powers of limb, he had received the nickname of BROM BONES, by which he was universally known. He was famed for great knowledge and skill in horsemanship, being as dexterous on horseback as a Tartar. He was foremost at all races and cock-fights; and, with the ascendancy which bodily strength always acquires in rustic life, was the umpire in all disputes, setting his hat on one side, and giving his decisions with an air and tone that admitted of no gainsay or appeal. He was always ready for either a fight or a frolic ; but had more mischief than ill-will in his composition ; and with all his overbearing roughness, there was a strong dash of waggish good humor at bottom. He had three or four boon companions, who regarded him as their model, and at the head of whom he scoured the country, attending every scene of feud or merriment for miles round. In cold weather he was distinguished by a fur cap, surmounted with a flaunting fox's tail ; and when the folks at a country gathering descried this well-known crest at a distance, whisking about among a squad of hard riders, they always stood by for a squall. Sometimes his crew would be heard dashing along past the farmhouses at midnight, with whoop and halloo, like a troop of Don Cossacks ;¹ and the old dames, startled out of their sleep, would listen for a moment till the hurry-scurry had clattered by, and then exclaim, " Ay, there goes Brom Bones and his gang ! " The neighbors looked upon him with a mixture of awe, admiration, and good-will ; and, when any madcap prank or rustic brawl occurred in the vicinity, always shook their heads, and warranted Brom Bones was at the bottom of it.

This rantipole hero had for some time singled out the blooming Katrina for the object of his uncouth gallantries, and though his amorous toyings were something like the gentle caresses and endearments of a bear, yet it was whispered that she did not altogether discourage his hopes. Certain it is, his advances were signals for rival candidates to retire, who felt no inclination to cross a lion in his amours; inso-much, that when his horse was seen tied to Van Tassel's paling, on a Sunday night, a sure sign that his master was courting, or, as it is termed, "sparking," within, all other suitors passed by in despair, and carried the war into other quarters.

¹ The Cossacks are restless and warlike Russian tribes, of excellent service to the Russian army as scouts, skirmishers, and irregular cavalry. They are widely distributed over the empire, and are popularly known by their localities as the Cossacks of the river Don, of the Danube, of the Black Sea, of the Caucasus, and so on.

Such was the formidable rival with whom Ichabod Crane had to contend, and, considering all things, a stouter man than he would have shrunk from the competition, and a wiser man would have despaired. He had, however, a happy mixture of pliability and perseverance in his nature; he was in form and spirit like a supple-jack — yielding, but tough; though he bent, he never broke; and though he bowed beneath the slightest pressure, yet, the moment it was away — jerk! — he was as erect, and carried his head as high as ever.

To have taken the field openly against his rival would have been madness; for he was not a man to be thwarted in his amours, any more than that stormy lover, Achilles.¹ Ichabod, therefore, made his advances in a quiet and gently insinuating manner. Under cover of his character of singing-master, he made frequent visits at the farmhouse; not that he had anything to apprehend from the meddlesome interference of parents, which is so often a stumbling-block in the path of lovers. Balt Van Tassel was an easy, indulgent soul; he loved his daughter better even than his pipe, and, like a reasonable man and an excellent father, let her have her way in everything. His notable little wife, too, had enough to do to attend to her housekeeping and manage her poultry; for, as she sagely observed, ducks and geese are foolish things, and must be looked after, but girls can take care of themselves. Thus, while the busy dame bustled about the house, or plied her spinning-wheel at one end of the piazza, honest Balt would sit smoking his evening pipe at the other, watching the achievements of a little wooden warrior, who, armed with a sword in each hand, was most valiantly fighting the wind on the pinnacle of the barn. In the mean time, Ichabod would carry on his suit with the daughter by the side of the spring under the great elm, or sauntering along in the twilight, that hour so favorable to the lover's eloquence.

¹ The most famous warrior of the Trojan War. The Iliad of Homer begins with the wrath of Achilles, in the tenth year of the war, because Agamemnon had taken from him Briseis, a beautiful captive, to whom he was strongly attached.

I profess not to know how women's hearts are wooed and won. To me they have always been matters of riddle and admiration. Some seem to have but one vulnerable point, or door of access; while others have a thousand avenues, and may be captured in a thousand different ways. It is a great triumph of skill to gain the former, but a still greater proof of generalship to maintain possession of the latter, for a man must battle for his fortress at every door and window. He who wins a thousand common hearts is therefore entitled to some renown; but he who keeps undisputed sway over the heart of a coquette is indeed a hero. Certain it is, this was not the case with the redoubtable Brom Bones; and from the moment Ichabod Crane made his advances, the interests of the former evidently declined: his horse was no longer seen tied to the palings on Sunday nights, and a deadly feud gradually arose between him and the preceptor of Sleepy Hollow.

Brom, who had a degree of rough chivalry in his nature, would fain have carried matters to open warfare and have settled their pretensions to the lady, according to the mode of those most concise and simple reasoners, the knights-errant of yore, — by single combat; but Ichabod was too conscious of the superior might of his adversary to enter the lists against him; he had overheard a boast of Bones, that he would “double the schoolmaster up, and lay him on a shelf of his own schoolhouse;” and he was too wary to give him an opportunity. There was something extremely provoking in this obstinately pacific system; it left Brom no alternative but to draw upon the funds of rustic waggery in his disposition, and to play off boorish practical jokes upon his rival. Ichabod became the object of whimsical persecution to Bones and his gang of rough riders. They harried his hitherto peaceful domains, smoked out his singing-school by stopping up the chimney, broke into the schoolhouse at night, in spite of its formidable fastenings of withe and window stakes, and turned everything topsy-turvy, so that the poor schoolmaster began to think all the witches in the country held their meetings there. But what was still more annoying, Brom took all opportunities of turning him into ridicule in presence of his mistress, and had a scoundrel dog whom he taught to whine in the most ridiculous manner, and introduced as a rival of Ichabod’s, to instruct her in psalmody.

In this way matters went on for some time, without producing any material effect on the relative situations of the contending powers. On a fine autumnal afternoon, Ichabod, in pensive mood, sat enthroned on the lofty stool from whence he usually watched all the concerns of his little literary realm. In his hand he swayed a ferule, that sceptre of despotic power; the birch of justice reposed on three nails behind the throne, a constant terror to evil doers; while on the desk before him might be seen sundry contraband articles and prohibited weapons, detected upon the persons of idle urchins, such as half-munched apples, popguns, whirligigs, fly-cages, and whole legions of rampant little paper game-cocks. Apparently there had been some appalling act of justice recently inflicted, for his scholars were all busily intent upon their books, or slyly whispering behind them with one eye kept upon the master; and a kind of buzzing stillness reigned throughout the schoolroom. It was suddenly interrupted by the appearance of a negro in tow-cloth jacket and trowsers, a round-crowned fragment of a hat, like the cap of Mercury, and mounted on the back of a ragged, wild, half-broken colt, which he managed with a rope by way of halter. He came clattering up to the school-door with an invitation to Ichabod to attend a merry-making or "quilting-frolic,"¹ to be held that evening at Mynheer Van Tassel's; and having delivered his message with that air of importance and effort at fine language which a negro is apt to display on petty embassies of the kind, he dashed over the brook, and was seen scampering away up the Hollow, full of the importance and hurry of his mission.

¹ "Now were instituted 'quilting-bees,' and 'husking-bees,' and other rural assemblages, where, under the inspiring influence of the fiddle, toil was enlivened by gayety and followed up by the dance." — Irving's History of New York.

All was now bustle and hubbub in the late quiet schoolroom. The scholars were hurried through their lessons without stopping at trifles; those who were nimble skipped over half with impunity, and those who were tardy had a smart application now and then in the rear, to quicken their speed or help them over a tall word. Books were flung aside without being put away on the shelves, inkstands were overturned, benches thrown down, and the whole school was turned loose an hour before the usual time, bursting forth like a legion of young imps, yelping and racketing about the green in joy at their early emancipation.

The gallant Ichabod now spent at least an extra half hour at his toilet, brushing and furbishing up his best, and indeed only suit of rusty black, and arranging his locks by a bit of broken looking-glass that hung up in the schoolhouse. That he might make his appearance before his mistress in the true style of a cavalier, he borrowed a horse from the farmer with whom he was domiciliated, a choleric old Dutchman of the name of Hans Van Ripper, and, thus gallantly mounted, issued forth like a knight-errant in quest of adventures. But it is meet I should, in the true spirit of romantic story, give some account of the looks and equipments of my hero and his steed. The animal he bestrode was a broken-down plow-horse, that had outlived almost everything but its viciousness. He was gaunt and shagged, with a ewe neck, and a head like a hammer; his rusty mane and tail were tangled and knotted with burs; one eye had lost its pupil, and was glaring and spectral, but the other had the gleam of a genuine devil in it. Still he must have had fire and mettle in his day, if we may judge from the name he bore of Gunpowder. He had, in fact, been a favorite steed of his master's, the choleric Van Ripper, who was a furious rider, and had infused, very probably, some of his own spirit into the animal; for, old and broken-down as he looked, there was more of the lurking devil in him than in any young filly in the country.

Ichabod was a suitable figure for such a steed. He rode with short stirrups, which brought his knees nearly up to the pommel of the saddle; his sharp elbows stuck out like grasshoppers'; he carried his whip perpendicularly in his hand, like a sceptre, and as his horse jogged on, the motion of his arms was not unlike the flapping of a pair of wings. A small wool hat rested on the top of his nose, for so his scanty strip of forehead might be called, and the skirts of his black coat fluttered out almost to the horse's tail. Such was the appearance of Ichabod and his steed as they shambled out of the gate of Hans Van Ripper, and it was altogether such an apparition as is seldom to be met with in broad daylight.

It was, as I have said, a fine autumnal day; the sky was clear and serene, and nature wore that rich and golden livery which we always associate with the idea of abundance. The forests had put on their sober brown and yellow, while some trees of the tenderer kind had been nipped by the frosts into brilliant dyes of orange, purple, and scarlet. Streaming files of wild ducks began to make their appearance high in the air; the bark of the squirrel might be heard from the groves of beech and hickory-nuts, and the pensive whistle of the quail at intervals from the neighboring stubble field.

The small birds were taking their farewell banquets. In the fullness of their revelry, they fluttered, chirping and frolicking from bush to bush, and tree to tree, capricious from the very profusion and variety around them. There was the honest cockrobin, the favorite game of stripling sportsmen, with its loud querulous note; and the twittering blackbirds flying in sable clouds; and the golden-winged woodpecker, with his crimson crest, his broad black gorget, and splendid plumage; and the cedar-bird, with its red-tipt wings and yellow-tipt tail and its little monteiro¹ cap of feathers; and the blue jay, that noisy coxcomb, in his gay light blue coat and white underclothes, screaming and chattering, nodding and bobbing and bowing, and pretending to be on good terms with every songster of the grove.

As Ichabod jogged slowly on his way, his eye, ever open to every symptom of culinary abundance, ranged with delight over the treasures of jolly autumn. On all sides he beheld vast store of apples: some hanging in oppressive opulence on the trees; some gathered into baskets and barrels for the market; others heaped up in rich piles for the cider-press. Farther on he beheld great fields of Indian corn, with its golden ears peeping from their leafy coverts, and holding out the promise of cakes and hasty-pudding; and the yellow pumpkins lying beneath them, turning up their fair round bellies to the sun, and giving ample prospects of the most luxurious of pies; and anon he passed the fragrant buckwheat fields breathing the odor of the beehive, and as he beheld them, soft anticipations stole over his mind of dainty slap-jacks, ¹ Same as montero (mon-tā'-rō), a horseman's or huntsman's cap, having a round crown with flaps which could be drawn down over the sides of the face.

"His hat was like a helmet or Spanish montero." — BACON.

well buttered, and garnished with honey or treacle, by the delicate little dimpled hand of Katrina Van Tassel.

Thus feeding his mind with many sweet thoughts and "sugared suppositions," he journeyed along the sides of a range of hills which look out upon some of the goodliest scenes of the mighty Hudson. The sun gradually wheeled his broad disk down in the west. The wide bosom of the Tappan Zee lay motionless and glassy, excepting that here and there a gentle undulation waved and prolonged the blue shadow of the distant mountain. A few amber clouds floated in the sky, without a breath of air to move them. The horizon was of a fine golden tint, changing gradually into a pure apple green, and from that into the deep blue of the mid-heaven. A slanting ray lingered on the woody crests of the precipices that overhung some parts of the river, giving greater depth to the dark gray and purple of their rocky sides. A sloop was loitering in the distance, dropping slowly down with the tide, her sail hanging uselessly against the mast; and as the reflection of the sky gleamed along the still water, it seemed as if the vessel was suspended in the air.

It was toward evening that Ichabod arrived at the castle of the Heer Van Tassel, which he found thronged with the pride and flower of the adjacent country. Old farmers, a spare leathern-faced race, in homespun coats and breeches, blue stockings, huge shoes, and magnificent pewter buckles. Their brisk, withered little dames, in close crimped caps, long-waisted short-gowns, homespun petticoats, with scissors and pin-cushions, and gay calico pockets hanging on the outside. Buxom lasses, almost as antiquated as their mothers, excepting where a straw hat, a fine ribbon, or perhaps a white frock, gave symptoms of city innovation. The sons, in short square-skirted coats, with rows of stupendous brass buttons, and their hair generally queued in the fashion of the times, especially if they could procure an eelskin for the purpose, it being esteemed throughout the country as a potent nourisher and strengthener of the hair.

Brom Bones, however, was the hero of the scene, having come to the gathering on his favorite steed Daredevil, a creature, like himself, full of mettle and mischief, and which no one but himself could manage. He was, in fact, noted for preferring vicious animals, given to all kinds of tricks which kept the rider in constant risk of his neck, for he held a tractable, well-broken horse as unworthy of a lad of spirit.

Fain would I pause to dwell upon the world of charms that burst upon the enraptured gaze of my hero, as he entered the state parlor of Van Tassel's mansion. Not those of the bevy of buxom lasses, with their luxurious display of red and white; but the ample charms of a genuine Dutch country tea-table, in the sumptuous time of autumn. Such heaped-up platters of cakes of various and almost indescribable kinds, known only to experienced Dutch housewives! There was the doughty doughnut, the tender olykoeck,¹ and the crisp and crumbling cruller; sweet cakes and short cakes, ginger cakes and honey cakes, and the whole family of cakes. And then there were apple pies, and peach pies, and pumpkin pies; besides slices of ham and smoked beef; and moreover delectable dishes of preserved plums, and peaches, and pears, and quinces; not to mention broiled shad and roasted chickens; together with bowls of milk and cream, all mingled higgledy-piggledy, pretty much as I have enumerated them, with the motherly teapot sending up its clouds of vapor from the midst — Heaven bless the mark! I want breath and time to discuss this banquet as it deserves, and am too eager to get on with my story. Happily, Ichabod Crane was not in so great a hurry as his historian, but did ample justice to every dainty.

¹ Pronounced ō'-li-cook, from a Dutch word that means oil-cake. A cake of dough sweetened and fried in lard, — something like the cruller, but richer and tenderer.

He was a kind and thankful creature, whose heart dilated in proportion as his skin was filled with good cheer, and whose spirits rose with eating, as some men's do with drink. He could not help, too, rolling his large eyes round him as he ate, and chuckling with the possibility that he might one day be lord of all this scene of almost unimaginable luxury and splendor. Then, he thought, how soon he'd turn his back upon the old school-house; snap his fingers in the face of Hans Van Ripper, and every other niggardly patron, and kick any itinerant pedagogue out of doors that should dare to call him comrade!

Old Baltus Van Tassel moved about among his guests with a face dilated with content and good-humor, round and jolly as the harvest moon. His hospitable attentions were brief, but expressive, being confined to a shake of the hand, a slap on the shoulder, a loud laugh, and a pressing invitation to "fall to, and help themselves."

And now the sound of the music from the common room, or hall, summoned to the dance. The musician was an old gray-headed negro, who had been the itinerant orchestra of the neighborhood for more than half a century. His instrument was as old and battered as himself. The greater part of the time he scraped on two or three strings, accompanying every movement of the bow with a motion of the head; bowing almost to the ground, and stamping with his foot whenever a fresh couple were to start.

Ichabod prided himself upon his dancing as much as upon his vocal powers. Not a limb, not a fibre about him was idle; and to have seen his loosely hung frame in full motion, and clattering about the room, you would have thought St. Vitus himself, that blessed patron of the dance, was figuring before you in person. He was the admiration of all the negroes; who, having gathered, of all ages and sizes, from the farm and the neighborhood, stood forming a pyramid of shining black faces at every door and window; gazing with delight at the scene; rolling their white eye-balls, and showing grinning rows of ivory from ear to ear. How could the flogger of urchins be otherwise than animated and joyous? the lady of his heart was his partner in the dance, and smiling graciously in reply to all his amorous oglings; while Brom Bones, sorely smitten with love and jealousy, sat brooding by himself in one corner.

When the dance was at an end, Ichabod was attracted to a knot of the sager folks, who, with Old Van Tassel, sat smoking at one end of the piazza, gossiping over former times, and drawing out long stories about the war.

This neighborhood, at the time of which I am speaking, was one of those highly favored places which abound with chronicle and great men. The British and American line had run near it during the war; it had, therefore, been the scene of marauding, and infested with refugees, cow-boys, and all kinds of border chivalry. Just sufficient time had elapsed to enable each story-teller to dress up his tale with a little becoming fiction, and, in the indistinctness of his recollection, to make himself the hero of every exploit.

There was the story of Doffue Martling, a large blue-bearded Dutchman, who had nearly taken a British frigate with an old iron nine-pounder from a mud breastwork, only that his gun burst at the sixth discharge. And there was an old gentleman who shall be nameless, being too rich a mynheer¹ to be lightly mentioned, who, in the battle of White Plains, being an excellent master of defence, parried a musket-ball with a small-sword, insomuch that he absolutely felt it whiz round the blade, and glance off at the hilt; in proof of which he was ready at any time to show the sword, with the hilt a little bent. There were several more that had been equally great in the field, not one of whom but was persuaded that he had a considerable hand in bringing the war to a happy termination.

But all these were nothing to the tales of ghosts and apparitions that succeeded. The neighborhood is rich in legendary treasures of the kind. Local tales and superstitions thrive best in these sheltered, long settled retreats; but are trampled under foot by the shifting throng that forms the population of most of our country places. Besides, there is no encouragement for ghosts in most of our villages, for they have scarcely had time to finish their first nap and turn themselves in their graves, before their surviving friends have travelled away from the neighborhood ; so that when they turn out at night to walk their rounds, they have no acquaintance left to call upon. This is perhaps the reason why we so seldom hear of ghosts except in our long-established Dutch communities.

¹ Pronounced mīn-hār'. Literally, my lord. It is the ordinary title of address among Dutchmen, corresponding to sir or Mr. in English use. Hence, a Dutchman.

The immediate cause, however, of the prevalence of supernatural stories in these parts, was doubtless owing to the vicinity of Sleepy Hollow. There was a contagion in the very air that blew from that haunted region ; it breathed forth an atmosphere of dreams and fancies infecting all the land. Several of the Sleepy Hollow people were present at Van Tassel's, and, as usual, were doling out their wild and wonderful legends. Many dismal tales were told about funeral trains, and mourning cries and wailings heard and seen about the great tree where the unfortunate Major André was taken, and which stood in the neighborhood. Some mention was made also of the woman in white, that haunted the dark glen at Raven Rock, and was often heard to shriek on winter nights before a storm, having perished there in the snow. The chief part of the stories, however, turned upon the favorite spectre of Sleepy Hollow, the Headless Horseman, who had been heard several times of late, patrolling the country ; and, it was said, tethered his horse nightly among the graves in the churchyard.

The sequestered situation of this church seems always to have made it a favorite haunt of troubled spirits. It stands on a knoll, surrounded by locust-trees and lofty elms, from among which its decent whitewashed walls shine modestly forth, like Christian ourity beaming through the shades of retirement. A gentle slope descends from it to a silver sheet of water, bordered by high trees, between which, peeps may be caught at the blue hills of the Hudson. To look upon its grass-grown yard, where the sunbeams seem to sleep so quietly, one would think that there at least the dead might rest in peace. On one side of the church extends a wide woody dell, along which raves a large brook among broken rocks and trunks of fallen trees. Over a deep black part of the stream, not far from the church, was formerly thrown a wooden bridge; the road that led to it, and the bridge itself, were thickly shaded by overhanging trees, which cast a gloom about it, even in the day-time; but occasioned a fearful darkness at night. Such was one of the favorite haunts of the Headless Horseman, and the place where he was most frequently encountered. The tale was told of old Brouwer, a most heretical disbeliever in ghosts, how he met the Horseman returning from his foray into Sleepy Hollow, and was obliged to get up behind him; how they galloped over bush and brake, over hill and swamp, until they reached the bridge; when the Horseman suddenly turned into a skeleton, threw old Brouwer into the brook, and sprang away over the tree-tops with a clap of thunder.

This story was immediately matched by a thrice marvellous adventure of Brom Bones, who made light of the Galloping Hessian as an arrant jockey. He affirmed that on returning one night from the neighboring village of Sing Sing, he had been overtaken by this midnight trooper; that he had offered to race with him for a bowl of punch, and should have won it too, for Daredevil beat the goblin horse all hollow, but just as they came to the church bridge, the Hessian bolted, and vanished in a flash of fire.

All these tales, told in that drowsy undertone with which men talk in the dark, the countenances of the listeners only now and then receiving a casual gleam from the glare of a pipe, sank deep in the mind of Ichabod. He repaid them in kind with large extracts from his invaluable author, Cotton Mather, and added many marvellous events that had taken place in his native State of Connecticut, and fearful sights which he had seen in his nightly walks about Sleepy Hollow.

The revel now gradually broke up. The old farmers gathered together their families in their wagons, and were heard for some time rattling along the hollow roads, and over the distant hills. Some of the damsels mounted on pillions behind their favorite swains, and their light-hearted laughter, mingling with the clatter of hoofs, echoed along the silent woodlands, sounding fainter and fainter, until they gradually died away, — and the late scene of noise and frolic was all silent and deserted. Ichabod only lingered behind, according to the custom of country lovers, to have a tête-à-tête with the heiress; fully convinced that he was now on the high road to success. What passed at this interview I will not pretend to say, for in fact I do not know. Something, however, I fear me, must have gone wrong, for he certainly sallied forth, after no very great interval, with an air quite desolate and chapfallen. Oh, these women! these women! Could that girl have been playing off any of her coquettish tricks? Was her encouragement of the poor pedagogue all a mere sham to secure her conquest of his rival? Heaven only knows, not I! Let it suffice to say, Ichabod stole forth with the air of one who had been sacking a henroost, rather than a fair lady's heart. Without looking to the right or left to notice the scene of rural wealth, on which he had so often gloated, he went straight to the stable, and with several hearty cuffs and kicks roused his steed most uncourteously from the comfortable quarters in which he was soundly sleeping, dreaming of mountains of corn and oats, and whole valleys of timothy and clover.

It was the very witching time of night¹ that Ichabod, heavy-hearted and crest-fallen, pursued his travels homewards, along the sides of the lofty hills which rise above Tarry Town, and which he had traversed so cheerily in the afternoon. The hour was as dismal as himself. Far below him the Tappan Zee spread its dusky and indistinct waste of waters, with here and there the tall mast of a sloop, riding quietly at anchor under the land. In the dead hush of midnight, he could even hear the barking of the watchdog from the opposite shore of the Hudson; but it was so vague and faint as only to give an idea of his distance from this faithful companion of man. Now and then, too, the long-drawn crowing of a cock, accidentally awakened, would sound far, far off, from some farmhouse away among the hills — but it was like a dreaming sound in his ear. No signs of life occurred near him, but occasionally the melancholy chirp of a cricket, or perhaps the guttural twang of a bull-frog from a neighboring marsh, as if sleeping uncomfortably and turning suddenly in his bed.

All the stories of ghosts and goblins that he had heard in the afternoon now came crowding upon his recollection. The night grew darker and darker; the stars seemed to sink deeper in the sky, and driving clouds occasionally hid them from his sight. He had never felt so lonely and dismal. He was, moreover, approaching the very place where many of the scenes of the ghost stories had been laid. In the centre of the road stood an enormous tulip-tree, which towered like a giant above all the other trees of the neighborhood, and formed a kind of landmark. Its limbs were gnarled and fantastic, large enough to form trunks for ordinary trees, twisting down almost to the earth, and rising again into the air. It was connected with the tragical story of the unfortunate André, who had been taken prisoner hard by; and was universally known by the name of Major André's tree. The common people regarded it with a mixture of respect and superstition, partly out of sympathy for the fate of its ill-starred namesake, and partly from the tales of strange sights, and doleful lamentations, told concerning it.

¹ " 'Tis now the very witching time of night
When churchyards yawn." — Hamlet.

As Ichabod approached this fearful tree, he began to whistle; he thought his whistle was answered; it was but a blast sweeping sharply through the dry branches. As he approached a little nearer, he thought he saw something white, hanging in the midst of the tree: he paused, and ceased whistling; but, on looking more narrowly, perceived that it was a place where the tree had been scathed by lightning, and the white wood laid bare. Suddenly he heard a groan — his teeth chattered, and his knees smote against the saddle: it was but the rubbing of one huge bough upon another, as they were swayed about by the breeze. He passed the tree in safety, but new perils lay before him.

About two hundred yards from the tree, a small brook crossed the road, and ran into a marshy and thickly-wooded glen, known by the name of Wiley's Swamp. A few rough logs, laid side by side, served for a bridge over this stream. On that side of the road where the brook entered the wood, a group of oaks and chestnuts, matted thick with wild grape-vines, threw a cavernous gloom over it. To pass this bridge was the severest trial. It was at this identical spot that the unfortunate André was captured, and under the covert of those chestnuts and vines were the sturdy yeomen concealed who surprised him. This has ever since been considered a haunted stream, and fearful are the feelings of the school-boy who has to pass it alone after dark.

As he approached the stream his heart began to thump; he summoned up, however, all his resolution, gave his horse half a score of kicks in the ribs, and attempted to dash briskly across the bridge; but instead of starting forward, the perverse old animal made a lateral movement, and ran broadside against the fence. Ichabod, whose fears increased with the delay, jerked the reins on the other side, and kicked lustily with the contrary foot: it was all in vain; his steed started, it is true, but it was only to plunge to the opposite side of the road into a thicket of brambles and alder-bushes. The schoolmaster now bestowed both whip and heel upon the starveling ribs of old Gunpowder, who dashed forward, snuffing and snorting, but came to a stand just by the bridge, with a suddenness that had nearly sent his rider sprawling over his head. Just at this moment a plashy tramp by the side of the bridge caught the sensitive ear of Ichabod. In the dark shadow of the grove, on the margin of the brook, he beheld something huge, misshapen, and towering. It stirred not, but seemed gathered up in the gloom, like some gigantic monster ready to spring upon the traveller.

The hair of the affrighted pedagogue rose upon his head with terror. What was to be done? To turn and fly was now too late; and besides, what chance was there of escaping ghost or goblin, if such it was, which could ride upon the wings of the wind? Summoning up, therefore, a show of courage, he demanded in stammering accents, "Who are you?" He received no reply. He repeated his demand in a still more agitated voice. Still there was no answer. Once more he cudgelled the sides of the inflexible Gunpowder, and, shutting his eyes, broke forth with involuntary fervor into a psalm tune. Just then the shadowy object of alarm put itself in motion, and with a scramble and a bound stood at once in the middle of the road. Though the night was dark and dismal, yet the form of the unknown might now in some degree be ascertained. He appeared to be a horseman of large dimensions, and mounted on a black horse of powerful frame. He made no offer of molestation or sociability, but kept aloof on one side of the road, jogging along on the blind side of old Gunpowder, who had now got over his fright and waywardness.

Ichabod, who had no relish for this strange midnight companion, and bethought himself of the adventure of Brom Bones with the Galloping Hessian, now quickened his steed in hopes of leaving him behind. The stranger, however, quickened his horse to an equal pace. Ichabod pulled up, and fell into a walk, thinking to lag behind, — the other did the same. His heart began to sink within him: he endeavored to resume his psalm tune, but his parched tongue clove to the roof of his mouth, and he could not utter a stave. There was something in the moody and dogged silence of this pertinacious companion that was mysterious and appalling. It was soon fearfully accounted for. On mounting a rising ground, which brought the figure of his fellow-traveller in relief against the sky, gigantic in height, and muffled in a cloak, Ichabod was horror-struck on perceiving that he was headless! but his horror was still more increased on observing that the head, which should have rested on his shoulders, was carried before him on the pommel of his saddle! His terror rose to desperation; he rained a shower of kicks and blows upon Gunpowder, hoping by a sudden movement to give his companion the slip; but the spectre started full jump with him. Away, then, they dashed through thick and thin; stones flying and sparks flashing at every bound. Ichabod's flimsy garments fluttered in the air, as he stretched his long lank body away over his horse's head, in the eagerness of his flight.

They had now reached the road which turns off to Sleepy Hollow; but Gunpowder, who seemed possessed with a demon, instead of keeping up it, made an opposite turn, and plunged headlong down hill to the left. This road leads through a sandy hollow, shaded by trees for about a quarter of a mile, where it crosses the bridge famous in goblin story; and just beyond swells the green knoll on which stands the whitewashed church.

As yet the panic of the steed had given his unskilful rider an apparent advantage in the chase; but just as he had got half way through the hollow, the girths of the saddle gave way, and he felt it slipping from under him. He seized it by the pommel, and endeavored to hold it firm, but in vain; and had just time to save himself by clasping old Gunpowder round the neck, when the saddle fell to the earth, and he heard it trampled under foot by his pursuer. For a moment the terror of Hans Van Ripper's wrath passed across his mind, — for it was his Sunday saddle; but this was no time for petty fears; the goblin was hard on his haunches; and (unskilful rider that he was!) he had much ado to maintain his seat; sometimes slipping on one side, sometimes on another, and sometimes jolted on the high ridge of his horse's backbone, with a violence that he verily feared would cleave him asunder.

An opening in the trees now cheered him with the hopes that the church bridge was at hand. The wavering reflection of a silver star in the bosom of the brook told him that he was not mistaken. He saw the walls of the church dimly glaring under the trees beyond. He recollected the place where Brom Bones' ghostly competitor had disappeared. "If I can but reach that bridge,"¹ thought Ichabod, "I am safe." Just then he heard the black steed panting and blowing close behind him; he even fancied that he felt his hot breath. Another convulsive kick in the ribs, and old Gunpowder sprang upon the bridge; he thundered over the resounding planks; he

¹ It was a superstitious belief that witches could not cross the middle of a stream. In Burns's tale of Tam O'Shanter the hero is represented as urging his horse to gain the keystone of the bridge so as to escape the hotly pursuing witches:—

"Now, do thy speedy utmost, Meg,
And win the keystone of the brig:
There at them thou thy tail may toss,—
A running stream they dare not cross!"

gained the opposite side ; and now Ichabod cast a look behind to see if his pursuer should vanish, according to rule, in a flash of fire and brimstone. Just then he saw the goblin rising in his stirrups, and in the very act of hurling his head at him. Ichabod endeavored to dodge the horrible missile, but too late. It encountered his cranium with a tremendous crash, — he was tumbled headlong into the dust, and Gunpowder, the black steed, and the goblin rider, passed by like a whirlwind.

The next morning the old horse was found without his saddle, and with the bridle under his feet, soberly cropping the grass at his master's gate. Ichabod did not make his appearance at breakfast ; dinner-hour came, but no Ichabod. The boys assembled at the schoolhouse, and strolled idly about the banks of the brook ; but no schoolmaster. Hans Van Ripper now began to feel some uneasiness about the fate of poor Ichabod, and his saddle. An inquiry was set on foot, and after diligent investigation they came upon his traces. In one part of the road leading to the church was found the saddle trampled in the dirt ; the tracks of horses' hoofs deeply dented in the road, and evidently at furious speed, were traced to the bridge, beyond which, on the bank of a broad part of the brook, where the water ran deep and black, was found the hat of the unfortunate Ichabod, and close beside it a shattered pumpkin.

The brook was searched, but the body of the schoolmaster was not to be discovered. Hans Van Ripper, as executor of his estate, examined the bundle which contained all his worldly effects. They consisted of two shirts and a half ; two stocks for the neck ; a pair or two of worsted stockings ; an old pair of corduroy small-clothes ; a rusty razor ; a book of psalm tunes full of dog's-ears ; and a broken pitch-pipe. As to the books and furniture of the schoolhouse, they belonged to the community, excepting Cotton Mather's History of Witchcraft, a New England Almanac, and a book of dreams and fortune-telling ; in which last was a sheet of foolscap much scribbled and blotted in several fruitless attempts to make a copy of verses in honor of the heiress of Van Tassel. These magic books and the poetic scrawl were forthwith consigned to the flames by Hans Van Ripper ; who, from that time forward, determined to send his children no more to school ; observing that he never knew any good come of this same reading and writing. Whatever money the schoolmaster possessed, and he had received his quarter's pay but a day or two before, he must have had about his person at the time of his disappearance.

The mysterious event caused much speculation at the church on the following Sunday. Knots of gazers and gossips were collected in the churchyard, at the bridge, and at the spot where the hat and pumpkin had been found. The stories of Brouwer, of Bones, and a whole budget of others were called to mind ; and when they had diligently considered them all, and compared them with the symptoms of the present case, they shook their heads, and came to the conclusion that Ichabod had been carried off by the Galloping Hessian. As he was a bachelor, and in nobody's debt, nobody troubled his head any more about him ; the school was removed to a different quarter of the Hollow, and another pedagogue reigned in his stead.

It is true, an old farmer, who had been down to New York on a visit several years after, and from whom this account of the ghostly adventure was received, brought home the intelligence that Ichabod Crane was still alive; that he had left the neighborhood partly through fear of the goblin and Hans Van Ripper, and partly in mortification at having been suddenly dismissed by the heiress; that he had changed his quarters to a distant part of the country; had kept school and studied law at the same time; had been admitted to the bar; turned politician; electioneered; written for the newspapers; and finally had been made a justice of the ten pound court.¹ Brom Bones, too, who, shortly after his rival's disappearance conducted the blooming Katrina in triumph to the altar, was observed to look exceedingly knowing whenever the story of Ichabod was related, and always burst into a hearty laugh at the mention of the pumpkin; which led some to suspect that he knew more about the matter than he chose to tell.

The old country wives, however, who are the best judges of these matters, maintain to this day that Ichabod was spirited away by supernatural means; and it is a favorite story often told about the neighborhood round the winter evening fire. The bridge became more than ever an object of superstitious awe; and that may be the reason why the road has been altered of late years, so as to approach the church by the border of the mill-pond. The schoolhouse being deserted soon fell to decay, and was reported to be haunted by the ghost of the unfortunate pedagogue; and the plough-boy, loitering homeward of a still summer evening, has often fancied his voice at a distance, chanting a melancholy psalm tune among the tranquil solitudes of Sleepy Hollow.

¹ A court of justice authorized to deal with cases in which the amount of money involved does not exceed ten pounds.

POSTSCRIPT.

FOUND IN THE HANDWRITING OF MR. KNICKERBOCKER.

THE preceding tale is given almost in the precise words in which I heard it related at a Corporation meeting of the ancient city of the Manhattoes,¹ at which were present many of its sagest and most illustrious burghers. The narrator was a pleasant, shabby, gentlemanly old fellow in pepper-and-salt clothes, with a sadly humorous face ; and one whom I strongly suspected of being poor, — he made such efforts to be entertaining. When his story was concluded there was much laughter and approbation, particularly from two or three deputy aldermen, who had been asleep the greater part of the time. There was, however, one tall, dry-looking old gentleman, with beetling eyebrows, who maintained a grave and rather severe face throughout ; now and then folding his arms, inclining his head, and looking down upon the floor, as if turning a doubt over in his mind. He was one of your wary men, who never laugh but upon good grounds — when they have reason and the law on their side. When the mirth of the rest of the company had subsided, and silence was restored, he leaned one arm on the elbow of his chair, and sticking the other akimbo, demanded, with a slight but exceedingly sage motion of the head, and contraction of the brow, what was the moral of the story, and what it went to prove.

¹ The city of New York, as it is named in Diedrich Knickerbocker's (Irving's) History of New York.

The story-teller, who was just putting a glass of wine to his lips, as a refreshment after his toils, paused for a moment, looked at his inquirer with an air of infinite deference, and, lowering the glass slowly to the table, observed that the story was intended most logically to prove: —

“That there is no situation in life but has its advantages and pleasures, provided we will but take a joke as we find it;

“That, therefore, he that runs races with goblin troopers is likely to have rough riding of it;

“Ergo, for a country schoolmaster to be refused the hand of a Dutch heiress is a certain step to high preferment in the state.”

The cautious old gentleman knit his brows tenfold closer after this explanation, being sorely puzzled by the ratiocination of the syllogism; while, methought, the one in pepper-and-salt eyed him with something of a triumphant leer. At length he observed that all this was very well, but still he thought the story a little on the extravagant; there were one or two points on which he had his doubts.

“Faith, sir,” replied the story-teller, “as to that matter, I don’t believe one half of it myself.”

D. K.

INTRODUCTION TO PHILIP OF FOKANOKET.

KING Philip's War was due to the steady encroachment of the English upon the forests and hunting-grounds of the Indians. For fifty-five years peaceful relations had been maintained between the colonists and the powerful tribe of the Wampanoags (Waum-pa-nō'-agz), on whose lands Plymouth and other settlements had been planted. Philip, chief of the tribe, foreseeing the ultimate destruction of his people, resolved to depart from the policy of Massasoit, his father, and to turn upon the colonists. Rumors of war preceded its outbreak for many years. It is still a matter of doubt whether hostilities began in an accident or as the result of a deliberate plot. Once opened, they were carried on in a vindictive and desperate spirit. The war began in June, 1675, at Swansea, in Plymouth colony. It involved the Narragansetts and other New England tribes. Month after month saw scenes of ambush, assault, burning, pillaging, and butchery. The war was as savagely carried on by the English as by the Indians. It ended in the summer of 1676 through sheer exhaustion of the Indians. During this war thirteen towns were destroyed and many others suffered severely, six hundred buildings were burned, six hundred colonists were slain, many thousands suffered directly from the losses that accompany war, and frightful expenses were rolled up, entailing burdens upon feeble and sparsely settled communities that it took years to lighten. The mental anguish everywhere caused by the secrecy and cruelty of methods natural to Indian warfare, even when the dreaded blow did not fall, cannot be told.

From two to three thousand Indians were killed or captured, and the wretched remnants of the tribes whose power was broken either united with other tribes or, lingering about their old homes, ceased thereafter to be a serious menace to the colonies.

The various remains of Indian tribes in Massachusetts to-day, some of them descendants of the Indians that survived King Philip's War, number between one and two thousand souls. They are, to a certain extent, wards of the State of whose soil they were once the haughty owners.

PHILIP OF POKANOKET.

AN INDIAN MEMOIR.

As monumental bronze unchanged his look ;
 A soul that pity touch'd, but never shook :
 Train'd, from his tree-rock'd cradle to his bier,
 The fierce extremes of good and ill to brook
 Impassive — fearing but the shame of fear —
 A stoic of the woods — a man without a tear.

CAMPBELL.

It is to be regretted that those early writers who treated of the discovery and settlement of America have not given us more particular and candid accounts of the remarkable characters that flourished in savage life. The scanty anecdotes which have reached us are full of peculiarity and interest ; they furnish us with nearer glimpses of human nature, and show what man is in a comparatively primitive state, and what he owes to civilization. There is something of the charm of discovery in lighting upon these wild and unexplored tracts of human nature ; in witnessing, as it were, the native growth of moral sentiment ; and perceiving those generous and romantic qualities which have been artificially cultivated by society, vegetating in spontaneous hardihood and rude magnificence.

In civilized life, where the happiness, and indeed almost the existence, of man depends so much upon the opinion of his fellow-men, he is constantly acting a studied part. The bold and peculiar traits of native character are refined away, or softened down by the levelling influence of what is termed good breeding; and he practises so many petty deceptions, and affects so many generous sentiments, for the purposes of popularity, that it is difficult to distinguish his real from his artificial character. The Indian, on the contrary, free from the restraints and refinements of polished life, and, in a great degree, a solitary and independent being, obeys the impulses of his inclination or the dictates of his judgment; and thus the attributes of his nature, being freely indulged, grow singly great and striking. Society is like a lawn, where every roughness is smoothed, every bramble eradicated, and where the eye is delighted by the smiling verdure of a velvet surface; he, however, who would study nature in its wildness and variety, must plunge into the forest, must explore the glen, must stem the torrent, and dare the precipice.

These reflections arose on casually looking through a volume of early colonial history wherein are recorded, with great bitterness, the outrages of the Indians, and their wars with the settlers of New England. It is painful to perceive, even from these partial narratives, how the footsteps of civilization may be traced in the blood of the aborigines; how easily the colonists were moved to hostility by the lust of conquest; how merciless and exterminating was their warfare. The imagination shrinks at the idea, how many intellectual beings were hunted from the earth ; how many brave and noble hearts, of nature's sterling coinage, were broken down and trampled in the dust !

Such was the fate of PHILIP OF POKANOKET,¹ an Indian warrior, whose name was once a terror throughout Massachusetts and Connecticut. He was the most distinguished of a number of contemporary sachems who reigned over the Pequods, the Narragansetts, the Wampanoags, and the other eastern tribes, at the time of the first settlement of New England : a band of native untaught heroes ; who made the most generous struggle of which human nature is capable ; fighting to the last gasp in the cause of their country, without a hope of victory or a thought of renown. Worthy of an age of poetry, and fit subjects for local story and romantic fiction, they have left scarcely any authentic traces on the page of history, but stalk

¹ Po-ko-nō'ket, now Bristol, Rhode Island. The orthography of Indian names in this memoir is unsettled. The early colonists heard these names from Indian lips, but they could not spell them in a uniform way. The same Indian sometimes had several names. The same name showed minor diversities in pronunciation. The colonists were not exact in interpreting Indian sounds. Moreover, they did not spell common English words with consistency. It was natural, therefore, that a great deal of confusion should appear both in their spelling and in their pronunciation of Indian names. Thus Philip's name appears in various deeds and records under the following forms: Pometacom, Pumatacom, Pometacome, Metacom, Metacome, Metacum, Metacomet, Metamō'cet, and so on. For Pokonoket may be found Poconoket, Pocanakett, Pakanawkett, and Pawkunnawkeet ; for Miantoni'mo, Miantonimoh, Miantonomio, Miantonomo, Miantonomah, and Miantunnomah ; for Canōn'chet, Quananchit, Quananchett, and Quanonchet ; for Wēt'amoe, Weetimoo and Wettimore. Study of these variations reveals the pronunciation of the forms adopted by Irving.

like gigantic shadows in the dim twilight of tradition.¹

When the Pilgrims, as the Plymouth settlers are called by their descendants, first took refuge on the shores of the New World, from the religious persecutions of the Old, their situation was to the last degree gloomy and disheartening. Few in number, and that number rapidly perishing away through sickness and hardships; surrounded by a howling wilderness and savage tribes; exposed to the rigors of an almost arctic winter, and the vicissitudes of an ever-shifting climate; their minds were filled with doleful forebodings, and nothing preserved them from sinking into despondency but the strong excitement of religious enthusiasm. In this forlorn situation they were visited by Massasoit, chief sagamore of the Wampanoags, a powerful chief, who reigned over a great extent of country. Instead of taking advantage of the scanty number of the strangers, and expelling them from his territories into which they had intruded, he seemed at once to conceive for them a generous friendship, and extended towards them the rites of primitive hospitality. He came early in the spring to their settlement of New Plymouth,² attended by a mere handful of followers; entered into a solemn league of peace and amity; sold them a portion of the soil, and promised to secure for them the good will of his savage allies. Whatever may be said of Indian perfidy, it is certain that the integrity and good faith of Massasoit have never been impeached. He continued a firm and magnanimous friend of the white men ; suffering them to extend their possessions, and to strengthen themselves in the land ; and betraying no jealousy of their increasing power and prosperity. Shortly before his death, he came once more to New Plymouth, with his son Alexander, for the purpose of renewing the covenant of peace, and of securing it to his posterity.

¹ While correcting the proof-sheets of this article, the author is informed that a celebrated English poet has nearly finished an heroic poem on the story of Philip of Pokanoket. — W. I.

² Simply Plymouth, Massachusetts, which for a time was spoken of as New Plymouth to distinguish it from the town of the same name in England.

At this conference, he endeavored to protect the religion of his forefathers from the encroaching zeal of the missionaries ; and stipulated that no further attempt should be made to draw off his people from their ancient faith ; but, finding the English obstinately opposed to any such condition, he mildly relinquished the demand. Almost the last act of his life was to bring his two sons,¹ Alexander and Philip (as they had been named by the English), to the residence of a principal settler, recommending mutual kindness and confidence, and entreating that the same love and amity which had existed between the white men and himself might be continued afterwards with his children. The good old sachem died in peace, and was happily gathered to his fathers before sorrow came upon his tribe ; his children remained behind to experience the ingratitude of white men.

¹ "In Anno 1662, Plymouth Colony was in some Danger of being involved in Trouble by the Wampanoag Indians. After Massasoit was dead, his two Sons called Wamsutta and Metacomet [Irving gives the name as Metamocet] came to the Court at Plymouth pretending high respect for the English, and therefore desired English Names might be imposed on them, whereupon the Court there named Wamsutta (the elder Brother) Alexander, and Metacomet (the younger Brother) Philip." — Increase Mather. The English doubtless had in mind the famous Macedonian warriors.

His eldest son, Alexander, succeeded him. He was of a quick and impetuous temper, and proudly tenacious of his hereditary rights and dignity. The intrusive policy and dictatorial conduct of the strangers excited his indignation; and he beheld with uneasiness their exterminating wars with the neighboring tribes. He was doomed soon to incur their hostility, being accused of plotting with the Narragansetts to rise against the English and drive them from the land. It is impossible to say whether this accusation was warranted by facts, or was grounded on mere suspicions. It is evident, however, by the violent and overbearing measures of the settlers, that they had by this time begun to feel conscious of the rapid increase of their power, and to grow harsh and inconsiderate in their treatment of the natives. They dispatched an armed force to seize upon Alexander and to bring him before their courts. He was traced to his woodland haunts, and surprised at a hunting house, where he was reposing with a band of his followers, unarmed, after the toils of the chase. The suddenness of his arrest, and the outrage offered to his sovereign dignity, so preyed upon the irascible feelings of this proud savage as to throw him into a raging fever; he was permitted to return home on condition of sending his son as a pledge for his re-appearance; but the blow he had received was fatal, and before he reached his home he fell a victim to the agonies of a wounded spirit.

The successor of Alexander was Metamocet, or King Philip, as he was called by the settlers, on account of his lofty spirit and ambitious temper. These, together with his well-known energy and enterprise, had rendered him an object of great jealousy and apprehension, and he was accused of having always cherished a secret and implacable hostility towards the whites. Such may very probably, and very naturally, have been the case. He considered them as originally but mere intruders into the country, who had presumed upon indulgence, and were extending an influence baneful to savage life. He saw the whole race of his countrymen melting before them from the face of the earth; their territories slipping from their hands, and their tribes becoming feeble, scattered, and dependent. It may be said that the soil was originally purchased by the settlers; but who does not know the nature of Indian purchases, in the early periods of colonization? The Europeans always made thrifty bargains, through their superior adroitness in traffic; and they gained vast accessions of territory, by easily-provoked hostilities. An uncultivated savage is never a nice inquirer into the refinements of law, by which an injury may be gradually and legally inflicted. Leading facts are all by which he judges; and it was enough for Philip to know that before the intrusion of the Europeans his countrymen were lords of the soil, and that now they were becoming vagabonds in the land of their fathers.

But whatever may have been his feelings of general hostility, and his particular indignation at the treatment of his brother, he suppressed them for the present; renewed the contract with the settlers; and resided peaceably for many years at Pokanoket, or, as it was called by the English, Mount Hope, the ancient seat of dominion of his tribe. Suspicions, however, which were at first but vague and indefinite, began to acquire form and substance; and he was at length charged with attempting to instigate the various eastern tribes to rise at once, and, by a simultaneous effort, to throw off the yoke of their oppressors. It is difficult at this distant period to assign the proper credit due to these early accusations against the Indians. There was a proneness to suspicion, and an aptness to acts of violence on the part of the whites, that gave weight and importance to every idle tale. Informers abounded where tale-bearing met with countenance and reward, and the sword was readily unsheathed when its success was certain and it carved out empire.

The only positive evidence on record against Philip is the accusation of one Sausaman, a renegade Indian, whose natural cunning had been quickened by a partial education which he had received among the settlers. He changed his faith and his allegiance two or three times with a facility that evinced the looseness of his principles. He had acted for some time as Philip's confidential secretary and counsellor, and had enjoyed his bounty and protection. Finding, however, that the clouds of adversity were gathering round his patron, he abandoned his service and went over to the whites; and, in order to gain their favor, charged his former benefactor with plotting against their safety. A rigorous investigation took place. Philip and several of his subjects submitted to be examined, but nothing was proved against them. The settlers, however, had now gone too far to retract; they had previously determined that Philip was a dangerous neighbor; they had publicly evinced their distrust, and had done enough to insure his hostility; according, therefore, to the usual mode of reasoning in these cases, his destruction had become necessary to their security. Sausaman, the treacherous informer, was shortly after found dead in a pond, having fallen a victim to the vengeance of his tribe. Three Indians, one of whom was a friend and counsellor of Philip, were apprehended and tried, and, on the testimony of one very questionable witness, were condemned and executed as murderers.

This treatment of his subjects and ignominious punishment of his friend outraged the pride and exasperated the passions of Philip. The bolt which had fallen thus at his very feet awakened him to the gathering storm, and he determined to trust himself no longer in the power of the white men. The fate of his insulted and broken-hearted brother still rankled in his mind; and he had a further warning in the tragical story of Miantonimo, a great sachem of the Narragansetts, who, after manfully facing his accusers before a tribunal of the colonists, exculpating himself from a charge of conspiracy, and receiving assurances of amity, had been perfidiously dispatched at their instigation. Philip therefore gathered his fighting men about him, persuaded all strangers that he could to join his cause, sent the women and children to the Narragansetts for safety, and wherever he appeared was continually surrounded by armed warriors.

When the two parties were thus in a state of distrust and irritation, the least spark was sufficient to set them in a flame. The Indians, having weapons in their hands, grew mischievous, and committed various petty depredations. In one of their maraudings, a warrior was fired upon and killed by a settler. This was the signal for open hostilities; the Indians pressed to revenge the death of their comrade, and the alarm of war resounded through the Plymouth colony.

In the early chronicles of these dark and melancholy times, we meet with many indications of the diseased state of the public mind. The gloom of religious abstraction, and the wildness of their situation, among trackless forests and savage tribes, had disposed the colonists to superstitious fancies, and had filled their imaginations with the frightful chimeras of witchcraft and spectrology.¹ They were much given also to a belief in omens. The troubles with Philip and his Indians were preceded, we are told, by a variety of those awful warnings which forerun great and public calamities. The perfect form of an Indian bow appeared in the air at New Plymouth, which was looked upon by the inhabitants as a "prodigious apparition." At Hadley, Northampton, and other towns in their neighborhood, "was heard the report of a great piece of ordnance, with the shaking of the earth and a considerable echo." Others were alarmed on a still, sunshiny morning by the discharge of guns and muskets; bullets seemed to whistle past them, and the noise of drums resounded in the air, seeming to pass away to the westward; others fancied that they heard the galloping of horses over their heads; and certain monstrous births which took place about the time filled the superstitious in some towns with doleful forebodings. Many of these portentous sights and sounds may be ascribed to natural phenomena; to the northern lights which occur vividly in those latitudes; the meteors which explode in the air; the casual rushing of a blast through the top branches of the forest; the crash of falling trees or disrupted rocks; and to those other uncouth sounds and echoes which will sometimes strike the ear so strangely amidst the profound stillness of woodland solitudes. These may have startled some melancholy imaginations, may have been exaggerated by the love for the marvellous, and listened to with that avidity with which we devour whatever is fearful and mysterious. The universal currency of these superstitious fancies, and the grave record made of them by one of the learned men¹ of the day, are strongly characteristic of the times.

¹ To Irving's mind this word means the supposed science that treats of apparitions.

The nature of the contest that ensued was such as too often distinguishes the warfare between civilized men and savages. On the part of the whites it was conducted with superior skill and success, but with a wastefulness of the blood and a disregard of the natural rights of their antagonists; on the part of the Indians it was waged with the desperation of men fearless of death, and who had nothing to expect from peace, but humiliation, dependence, and decay.

The events of the war are transmitted to us by a worthy clergyman of the time, who dwells with horror and indignation on every hostile act of the Indians, however justifiable, while he mentions with applause the most sanguinary atrocities of the whites. Philip is reviled as a murderer and a traitor, without considering that he was a true born prince, gallantly fighting at the head of his subjects to avenge the wrongs of his family, to retrieve the tottering power of his line, and to deliver his native land from the oppression of usurping strangers.

¹ Rev. Increase Mather, pastor of the Old North Church in Boston for sixty-two years. He was born in 1639 and died in 1723. Among his ninety-two distinct publications are full accounts of King Philip's War, in which popular superstitions and well authenticated facts are woven together after the fashion of the times.

The project of a wide and simultaneous revolt, if such had really been formed, was worthy of a capacious mind, and, had it not been prematurely discovered, might have been overwhelming in its consequences. The war that actually broke out was but a war of detail, a mere succession of casual exploits and unconnected enterprises. Still it sets forth the military genius and daring prowess of Philip; and wherever, in the prejudiced and passionate narrations that have been given of it, we can arrive at simple facts, we find him displaying a vigorous mind, a fertility in expedients, a contempt of suffering and hardship, and an unconquerable resolution, that command our sympathy and applause.

Driven from his paternal domains at Mount Hope, he threw himself into the depths of those vast and trackless forests that skirted the settlements, and were almost impervious to anything but a wild beast or an Indian. Here he gathered together his forces, like the storm accumulating its stores of mischief in the bosom of the thunder-cloud, and would suddenly emerge at a time and place least expected, carrying havoc and dismay into the villages. There were now and then indications of these impending ravages that filled the minds of the colonists with awe and apprehension. The report of a distant gun would perhaps be heard from the solitary woodland, where there was known to be no white man; the cattle which had been wandering in the woods would sometimes return home wounded; or an Indian or two would be seen lurking about the skirts of the forests, and suddenly disappearing, as the lightning will sometimes be seen playing silently about the edge of the cloud that is brewing up the tempest.

Though sometimes pursued and even surrounded by the settlers, yet Philip as often escaped almost miraculously from their toils, and, plunging into the wilderness, would be lost to all search or inquiry until he again emerged at some far distant quarter, laying the country desolate. Among his strongholds were the great swamps or morasses which extend in some parts of New England, composed of loose bogs of deep black mud, perplexed with thickets, brambles, rank weeds, the shattered and mouldering trunks of fallen trees, overshadowed by lugubrious hemlocks. The uncertain footing and the tangled mazes of these shaggy wilds rendered them almost impracticable to the white man, though the Indian could thread their labyrinths with the agility of a deer. Into one of these, the great swamp of Pocasset Neck, was Philip once driven with a band of his followers. The English did not dare to pursue him, fearing to venture into these dark and frightful recesses, where they might perish in fens and miry pits or be shot down by lurking foes. They therefore invested the entrance to the neck, and began to build a fort, with the thought of starving out the foe; but Philip and his warriors wafted themselves on a raft over an arm of the sea, in the dead of night, leaving the women and children behind; and escaped away to the westward, kindling the flames of war among the tribes of Massachusetts and the Nipmuck country,¹ and threatening the colony of Connecticut.

¹ Written also Nipmug, Nipmuk, and Neepmuck. This country was northwest of the lands of the Wampanoags, among whom the Pilgrims settled. It lay chiefly in the southern part of the Worcester County of to-day, but partly in northern Connecticut. At the time of King Philip's War, it was within the jurisdiction of the Colony of Massachusetts Bay. An old writer tells how John Eliot, the apostle to the Indians, visited "the seven new praying towns in the Nipmug country" in 1663.

In this way Philip became a theme of universal apprehension. The mystery in which he was enveloped exaggerated his real terrors. He was an evil that walked in darkness, whose coming none could foresee, and against which none knew when to be on the alert. The whole country abounded with rumors and alarms. Philip seemed almost possessed of ubiquity ; for, in whatever part of the widely extended frontier an irruption from the forest took place, Philip was said to be its leader. Many superstitious notions also were circulated concerning him. He was said to deal in necromancy, and to be attended by an old Indian witch or prophetess, whom he consulted, and who assisted him by her charms and incantations. This indeed was frequently the case with Indian chiefs ; either through their own credulity, or to act upon that of their followers ; and the influence of the prophet and the dreamer over Indian superstitions has been fully evidenced in recent instances of savage warfare.

At the time that Philip effected his escape from Pocasset, his fortunes were in a desperate condition. His forces had been thinned by repeated fights, and he had lost almost the whole of his resources. In this time of adversity he found a faithful friend in Canonchet, chief sachem of all the Narragansetts. He was the son and heir of Miantonimo, the great sachem, who, as already mentioned, after an honorable acquittal of the charge of conspiracy, had been privately put to death at the perfidious instigations of the settlers. "He was the heir," says the old chronicler, "of all his father's pride and insolence, as well as of his malice towards the English ;" he certainly was the heir of his insults and injuries, and the legitimate avenger of his murder. Though he had forborne to take an active part in this hopeless war, yet he received Philip and his broken forces with open arms, and gave them the most generous countenance and support. This at once drew upon him the hostility of the English, and it was determined to strike a signal blow, that should involve both the sachems in one common ruin. A great force was therefore gathered together from Massachusetts, Plymouth,¹ and Connecticut, and was sent into the Narragansett country in the depth of winter, when the swamps, being frozen and leafless, could be traversed with comparative facility, and would no longer afford dark and impenetrable fastnesses to the Indians.

Apprehensive of attack, Canonchet had conveyed the greater part of his stores, together with the old, the infirm, the women and children of his tribe, to a strong fortress, where he and Philip had likewise drawn up the flower of their forces. This fortress, deemed by the Indians impregnable, was situated upon a rising mound or kind of island, of five or six acres, in the midst of a swamp; it was constructed with a degree of judgment and skill vastly superior to what is usually displayed in Indian fortification, and indicative of the martial genius of these two chieftains.

Guided by a renegado Indian, the English penetrated, through December snows, to this stronghold, and came upon the garrison by surprise. The fight was fierce and tumultuous. The assailants were repulsed in their first attack, and several of their bravest officers were shot down in the act of storming the fortress, sword in hand. The assault was renewed with greater success. A lodgment was effected. The Indians were driven from one post to another. They disputed their ground inch by inch, fighting with the fury of despair. Most of their veterans were cut to pieces; and after a long and bloody battle, Philip and Canonchet, with a handful of surviving warriors, retreated from the fort, and took refuge in the thickets of the surrounding forest.

¹ It should be remembered that Massachusetts and Plymouth were at this time separate colonies, each with its own governor and legislative body. They were not united until 1692.

The victors set fire to the wigwams and the fort; the whole was soon in a blaze; many of the old men, the women, and the children perished in the flames. This last outrage overcame even the stoicism of the savage. The neighboring woods resounded with the yells of rage and despair uttered by the fugitive warriors as they beheld the destruction of their dwellings, and heard the agonizing cries of their wives and offspring. "The burning of the wigwams," says a contemporary writer,¹ "the shrieks and cries of the women and children, and the yelling of the warriors, exhibited a most horrible and affecting scene, so that it greatly moved some of the soldiers." The same writer cautiously adds, "They were in much doubt then, and afterwards seriously inquired, whether burning their enemies alive could be consistent with humanity and the benevolent principles of the gospel."

The fate of the brave and generous Canonchet is worthy of particular mention: the last scene of his life is one of the noblest instances on record of Indian magnanimity.

Broken down in his power and resources by this signal defeat, yet faithful to his ally and to the hapless cause which he had espoused, he rejected all overtures of peace, offered on condition of betraying Philip and his followers, and declared that "he would fight it out to the last man, rather than become a servant to the English." His home being destroyed, his country harassed and laid waste by the incursions of the conquerors, he was obliged to wander away to the banks of the Connecticut, where he formed a rallying point to the whole body of western Indians, and laid waste several of the English settlements.

¹ Rev. W. Ruggles, from whose manuscripts the quotations are made.

Early in the spring he departed on a hazardous expedition, with only thirty chosen men, to penetrate to Seaconck, in the vicinity of Mount Hope, and to procure seed-corn to plant for the sustenance of his troops. This little band of adventurers had passed safely through the Pequod country,¹ and were in the centre of the Narragansett, resting at some wigwams near Pautucket River, when an alarm was given of an approaching enemy. Having but seven men by him at the time, Canonchet dispatched two of them to the top of a neighboring hill, to bring intelligence of the foe.

Panic-struck by the appearance of a troop of English and Indians rapidly advancing, they fled in breathless terror past their chieftain, without stopping to inform him of the danger. Canonchet sent another scout, who did the same. He then sent two more, one of whom, hurrying back in confusion and affright, told him that the whole British army was at hand. Canonchet saw there was no choice but immediate flight. He attempted to escape round the hill, but was perceived and hotly pursued by the hostile Indians and a few of the fleetest of the English. Finding the swiftest pursuer close upon his heels, he threw off first his blanket, then his silver-laced coat and belt of peag,¹ by which his enemies knew him to be Canonchet, and redoubled the eagerness of pursuit.

¹ Southern Connecticut.

At length, in dashing through the river, his foot slipped upon a stone, and he fell so deep as to wet his gun. This accident so struck him with despair that, as he afterwards confessed, "his heart and his bowels turned within him, and he became like a rotten stick, void of strength."

To such a degree was he unnerved that, being seized by a Pequod Indian within a short distance of the river, he made no resistance, though a man of great vigor of body and boldness of heart. But on being made prisoner, the whole pride of his spirit rose within him; and from that moment we find, in the anecdotes given by his enemies, nothing but repeated flashes of elevated and prince-like heroism. Being questioned by one of the English who first came up with him, and who had not attained his twenty-second year, the proud-hearted warrior, looking with lofty contempt upon his youthful countenance, replied, "You are a child — you cannot understand matters of war — let your brother or your chief come — him will I answer."

Though repeated offers were made to him of his life, on condition of submitting with his nation to the English, yet he rejected them with disdain, and refused to send any proposals of the kind to the great body of his subjects, saying that he knew none of them would comply. Being reproached with his breach of faith towards the whites, his boast that he would not deliver up a Wampanoag nor the paring of a Wampanoag's nail, and his threat that he would burn the English alive in their houses, he disdained to justify himself, haughtily answering that others were as forward for the war as himself, and "he desired to hear no more thereof."

¹ Pronounced peeg: bits of shells, rounded and polished, and strung on a thread. These beads were used as money, the black and purple varieties being valued at twice as much as the white.

So noble and unshaken a spirit, so true a fidelity to his cause and his friend, might have touched the feelings of the generous and the brave; but Canonchet was an Indian; a being towards whom war had no courtesy, humanity no law, religion no compassion, — he was condemned to die. The last words of his that are recorded are worthy the greatness of his soul. When sentence of death was passed upon him, he observed "that he liked it well, for he should die before his heart was soft, or he had spoken anything unworthy of himself." His enemies gave him the death of a soldier, for he was shot at Stoningham, by three young sachems of his own rank.

The defeat of the Narragansett fortress and the death of Canonchet were fatal blows to the fortunes of King Philip. He made an ineffectual attempt to raise a head of war, by stirring up the Mohawks¹ to take arms; but though possessed of the native talents of a statesman, his arts were counteracted by the superior arts of his enlightened enemies, and the terror of their warlike skill began to subdue the resolution of the neighboring tribes. The unfortunate chieftain saw himself daily stripped of power, and his ranks rapidly thinning around him. Some were suborned by the whites; others fell victims to hunger and fatigue, and to the frequent attacks by which they were harassed. His stores were all captured; his chosen friends were swept away from before his eyes; his uncle was shot down by his side; his sister was carried into captivity; and in one of his narrow escapes he was compelled to leave his beloved wife and only son to the mercy of the enemy. "His ruin," says the historian, "being thus gradually carried on, his misery was not prevented, but augmented thereby; being himself made acquainted with the sense and experimental feeling of the captivity of his children, loss of friends, slaughter of his subjects, bereavement of all family relations, and being stripped of all outward comforts, before his own life should be taken away."

¹ One of the five (subsequently six) tribes that made up the great New York confederacy known as the Five Nations. The Mohawks dwelt in the valley of the river that bears their name.

To fill up the measure of his misfortunes, his own followers began to plot against his life, that by sacrificing him they might purchase dishonorable safety. Through treachery, a number of his faithful adherents, the subjects of Wetamoe, an Indian princess of Pocasset, a near kinswoman and confederate of Philip, were betrayed into the hands of the enemy. Wetamoe was among them at the time, and attempted to make her escape by crossing a neighboring river; either exhausted by swimming, or starved with cold and hunger, she was found dead and naked near the water side. But persecution ceased not at the grave; even death, the refuge of the wretched, where the wicked commonly cease from troubling, was no protection to this outcast female, whose great crime was affectionate fidelity to her kinsman and her friend. Her corpse was the object of unmanly and dastardly vengeance; the head was severed from the body and set upon a pole, and was thus exposed, at Taunton, to the view of her captive subjects. They immediately recognized the features of their unfortunate queen, and were so affected at this barbarous spectacle that, we are told, they broke forth into the "most horrid and diabolical lamentations."

However Philip had borne up against the complicated miseries and misfortunes that surrounded him, the treachery of his followers seemed to wring his heart and reduce him to despondency. It is said that "he never rejoiced afterwards, nor had success in any of his designs." The spring of hope was broken — the ardor of enterprise was extinguished; he looked around, and all was danger and darkness; there was no eye to pity, nor any arm that could bring deliverance. With a scanty band of followers, who still remained true to his desperate fortunes, the unhappy Philip wandered back to the vicinity of Mount Hope, the ancient dwelling of his fathers. Here he lurked about, "like a spectre, among the scenes of former power and prosperity, now bereft of home, of family and friend." There needs no better picture of his destitute and piteous situation, than that furnished by the homely pen of the chronicler, who is unwarily enlisting the feelings of the reader in favor of the hapless warrior whom he reviles. "Philip," he says, "like a savage wild beast, having been hunted by the English forces through the woods above a hundred miles backward and forward, at last was driven to his own den upon Mount Hope, where he retired with a few of his best friends into a swamp, which proved but a prison to keep him fast till the messengers of death came by divine permission to execute vengeance upon him."

Even in this last refuge of desperation and despair, a sullen grandeur gathers round his memory. We picture him to ourselves seated among his careworn followers, brooding in silence over his blasted fortunes, and acquiring a savage sublimity from the wildness and dreariness of his lurking-place. Defeated but not dismayed, crushed to the earth but not humiliated, he seemed to grow more haughty beneath disaster and to experience a fierce satisfaction in draining the last dregs of bitterness. Little minds are tamed and subdued by misfortune; but great minds rise above it. The very idea of submission awakened the fury of Philip, and he smote to death one of his followers who proposed an expedient of peace. The brother of the victim made his escape, and in revenge betrayed the retreat of his chieftain. A body of white men and Indians were immediately dispatched to the swamp where Philip lay crouched, glaring with fury and despair. Before he was aware of their approach, they had begun to surround him. In a little while he saw five of his trustiest followers laid dead at his feet; all resistance was vain; he rushed forth from his covert, and made a headlong attempt to escape, but was shot through the heart by a renegado Indian of his own nation.

Such is the scanty story of the brave but unfortunate King Philip; persecuted while living, slandered and dishonored when dead. If, however, we consider even the prejudiced anecdotes furnished us by his enemies, we may perceive in them traces of amiable and lofty character, sufficient to awaken sympathy for his fate and respect for his memory. We find that amidst all the harassing cares and ferocious passions of constant warfare, he was alive to the softer feelings of connubial love and paternal tenderness, and to the generous sentiment of friendship. The captivity of his "beloved wife and only son" is mentioned with exultation, as causing him poignant misery ; the death of any near friend is triumphantly recorded as a new blow on his sensibilities ; but the treachery and desertion of many of his followers, in whose affections he had confided, is said to have desolated his heart, and to have bereaved him of all further comfort. He was a patriot, attached to his native soil ; a prince, true to his subjects, and indignant of their wrongs ; a soldier, daring in battle, firm in adversity, patient of fatigue, of hunger, of every variety of bodily suffering, and ready to perish in the cause he had espoused. Proud of heart, and with an untamable love of natural liberty, he preferred to enjoy it among the beasts of the forests, or in the dismal and famished recesses of swamps and morasses, rather than bow his haughty spirit to submission, and live dependent and despised in the ease and luxury of the settlements. With heroic qualities and bold achievements that would have graced a civilized warrior, and have rendered him the theme of the poet and the historian, he lived a wanderer and a fugitive in his native land, and went down, like a lonely bark foundering amid darkness and tempest, — without a pitying eye to weep his fall, or a friendly hand to record his struggle.

EXPLANATORY NOTES.

RIP VAN WINKLE.

Rip Van Winkle and The Legend of Sleepy Hollow are the two pieces of writing by which Irving is best known to-day. They are in themselves excellent stories, and they have the added interest, from a literary point of view, of first exemplifying the form in which the short story was to become established during the nineteenth century. This form afterwards was brought to higher artistic perfection and wider general application by such writers as Edgar Allan Poe, Nathaniel Hawthorne, and Bret Harte in America, and Robert Louis Stevenson, Rudyard Kipling, and Sir Arthur Conan Doyle in England. A very striking view of the development of the short story may be obtained by reading the following examples in the order given: The Black Cat and The Fall of the House of Usher, by Poe; Howe's Masquerade, by Hawthorne; Tennessee's Partner, by Bret Harte; The Sieur de Maletroit's Door, by Stevenson; The Man Who Would be King and The Drums of the Fore and Aft, by Kipling; Silver Blaze, by Conan Doyle.

The story of Rip Van Winkle has been dramatized by Dion Boucicault, and the part of Rip himself was for many years finely interpreted by Joseph Jefferson.

PAGE

10 Fort Christina: a fort on the Delaware established by the Swedes and captured by Stuyvesant in 1655.

termagant: scolding, bad-tempered. The word comes from the devil-character Termagant in the old Miracle plays.

12 galligaskins: loose breeches.

13 a gallows air: a guilty or downcast look.

a rubicund portrait: a sign-board with a highly-colored picture of King George III.

14 the most gigantic word: We are reminded of the school-master in Goldsmith's Deserted Village:

While words of learned length and thundering sound
Amazed the gaping rustics ranged around;
And still they gazed, and still the wonder grew
That one small head could carry all he knew.

junto: a political club, a faction. From the Spanish junta, council.

virago: a violent, turbulent woman.

PAGE

- 15 shagged: covered with bushes. See Scott, Lay of the Last Minstrel:
 Land of brown heath and shaggy wood,
 Land of the mountain and the flood.
- 16 jerkin: short coat, jacket.
- 17 outlandish: foreign.
- doublets: close-fitting body-garments, with or without sleeves.
- sugar-loaf hat: hat with a high, rounded crown. In those days sugar was manufactured and sold in the form of "loaves"; these were cone-shaped, and about a foot high.
- 18 hanger: short curved sword.
- roses: rosettes of ribbon.
- Dominie: minister — the term was usually applied to a schoolmaster.
- Hollands: gin made in Holland.
- 19 firelock: or "flintlock," a gun in which the charge was ignited by the hammer striking a spark from a piece of flint. The percussion cap was invented later.
- roisters: revellers, roysterers.
- 22 a red night cap: a "liberty cap," placed on top of a liberty pole.
- 23 phlegm: apathy, dullness.
- Babylonish jargon: a mere confusion of words. The reference is to the Bible story of the Tower of Babel — see Genesis xi.
- Federal or Democrat: After the Revolution the country was divided into two political parties. The Federalists, with Hamilton at their head, believed in a strong central government; while the Democrats, led by Jefferson, wished to reserve many local powers to the individual states.
- a tory: the "tories" were those who remained faithful to the British Government.
- 28 Hendrick Hudson: Henry Hudson was a famous English sailor who discovered the Hudson River in 1609, while in the service of the Dutch East India Company. He sailed up as far as the site of Albany, hunting for a short route to India. He was afterwards employed by the British Government in a similar search and was eventually cast adrift in an open boat in Hudson's Bay by his mutinous crew (1611).
- the Half-Moon: the ship in which the voyage up the Hudson was made.
- the great city called by his name: an odd slip on Irving's part — New York was never named after Hudson.
- 30 Note. This passage, as well as the Prefatory Note to the story, gives an excellent idea of Irving's quiet humor. He revives the familiar figure of Diedrich Knickerbocker in order to bestow upon the tale a pleasant air of historical accuracy.

Questions and Topics for Study.

Which parts of the story seem to you to be best — the character drawing, the incidents in the hollow, or the descriptions of scenery? Discuss fully.

Write an imaginary conversation between Mr. Doolittle and the "self-important man" on the subject of Rip's return.

Do you know of any story, other than Rip Van Winkle, where the plot turns upon prolonged absence?

THE LEGEND OF SLEEPY HOLLOW.

The charm of this story lies in its leisurely movement, its pleasing and varied descriptive passages, and the touches throughout of slightly malicious humor. It is as if Irving himself stood by, watching with a smile the peculiarities of the schoolmaster.

PAGE

33 Tarry Town: The purchase of "Sunnyside" by Irving is mentioned in a letter to his brother Peter in 1835: "You have been told, no doubt, of a purchase I have made of ten acres, lying at the foot of Oscar's farm on the river bank. It is a beautiful spot, capable of being made a little paradise. There is a small stone cottage on it, built about a century since, and inhabited by one of the Van Tassels. My idea is to make a little nookery somewhat in the Dutch style, quaint but unpretending."

original Dutch settlers: The region about New York and the Lower Hudson was settled by emigrants sent out by the Dutch West India Company in 1623-29.

34 Hessian trooper: The Hessians were soldiers from Hesse, Germany, hired by the British Government during the Revolution to fight in America. The custom of using mercenary soldiers was common at the time. After the war the Hessians were offered the choice of being sent home or of taking up farm lands in the British Colony of Nova Scotia. Many of them accepted the latter offer, and their descendants may be found in the original district to-day.

35 back to the churchyard: It was an ancient belief that ghosts must return to their place before "cock-crow."

39 whilom: formerly, once upon a time. An old-fashioned word, introduced purposely, to give a flavor to the story.

carried away the palm: won a victory over. A palm branch was the ancient sign of victory; there is a well-known Latin proverb, "Palmam qui meruit ferat" — "let him who deserves it bear the palm."

41 harbinger: here, one who gives warning. The word originally meant an officer who was sent before a royal party to arrange for lodging and entertainment.

PAGE

varlet: wretch — used contemptuously. The word has deteriorated in meaning; originally it signified a boy of noble birth who was in training for knighthood.

- 42 fearful pleasure: pleasure that is full of fears. Compare the lines from Gray's Ode on a Distant Prospect of Eton College, where, speaking of truant schoolboys, he says:

They hear a voice in every wind,
And snatch a fearful joy.

- 43 perambulations: wanderings about.

- 46 chanticleer: the cock.

craving that quarter: asking for mercy. "Quarter" originally meant "peace," "friendship."

- 47 linsey-woolsey: coarse cloth made of a mixture of linen and wool.

Indian corn: what we call to-day, simply, "corn." It was termed Indian corn by the early English settlers, to distinguish it from wheat, which was (and still is) known as "corn" in England.

gaud: bright ornament.

knight-errant: The best example of the true knight-errant to be found in fiction is the Black Knight in Ivanhoe.

- 48 Herculean: gigantic. Hercules was the hero of Greek myth, famous for his strength.

Tartar: the Tartars were a race of wild nomadic horsemen, who inhabited the southern steppes of Russia.

- 49 rantipole: wild, rough. An unusual word.

- 50 supple-jack: a climbing plant with a strong, supple stem.

- 53 ferule: cane. The word is no longer used in this sense.

a negro: slaves were not uncommon in the North at the period of the story. There were a good many of them in New York at the time of Irving's youth.

cap of Mercury: Mercury, the messenger of the gods, was represented as wearing a close-fitting winged cap.

petty embassies: trivial errands.

- 57 The sun gradually wheeled: This passage contains a controlled and effective description of a noble scene. It should be compared with the passage in Rip Van Winkle beginning "In a long ramble of the kind," on page 15.

It was towards evening: Here we have an almost first-hand account of a picturesque gathering. Note the fine choice of descriptive epithets, in this and the preceding paragraph.

- 58 queued: gathered into a pig-tail. Long hair for men was the fashion of the time. The use of an "eelskin" would seem to us a somewhat unpleasant manner of arranging the queue.

PAGE

- 59 Heaven bless the mark! An exclamatory expression, here used humorously. The origin of the phrase is uncertain; the following explanation is taken from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase and Fable: "In archery, when an archer shot well it was customary to cry out 'God save the mark!' — that is, prevent anyone coming after to hit the same mark and displace my arrow. Ironically it was said to a novice whose arrow was nowhere."
want: lack.
- 60 St. Vitus: There was an old superstition in some parts of Europe that good health could be ensured for a year by dancing before an image of this saint on the occasion of his festival. The name "St. Vitus's dance" is given to a nervous disorder which affects the limbs.
- 61 There was the story: note the typical irony of this paragraph.
White Plains: a village about twenty miles north of New York, where a victory was gained by the British under Howe over the Americans under Washington, on October 28, 1776.
- 62 Major Andre: an officer in the British army during the Revolutionary War. He was chosen to arrange with Arnold for the transfer of West Point to British possession. He secured from Arnold maps and plans, but was captured at Tarrytown, and executed as a spy.
- 63 arrant jockey: unmitigated cheat.
should have won it: would certainly have won it. "Should," in the sense of "would" or "ought to," is now obsolete, but was good usage at least as late as 1859, for we find it in Dickens's Tale of Two Cities, Book I, chapter v: "He should have been of a hot temperament, for, although it was a bitter day, he wore no coat."
- 64 pillions: pads or cushions placed behind the saddle and adjusted for a second rider.
chapfallen: gloomy, "down in the mouth."
- 69 stave: a few bars from a piece of music.
- 71 stocks: A "stock" was a stiff band of horse-hair or leather, covered with some lighter material and fastened behind with a buckle.
- 72 small-clothes: knee-breeches. pitch-pipe: a small instrument used to give the note in starting a tune.
- 74 The Postscript is introduced, like the Note at the end of Rip Van Winkle, to give a touch of pretended reality.
sadly: solemnly.
one of your wary men: one who was always on his guard. The word "your" is used in a colloquial sense.
- 75 Ergo: therefore. A word employed by old-time logicians in stating the conclusion of an argument.

puzzled by the ratiocination of the syllogism: puzzled by the line of reasoning in the argument. A "syllogism" is argument reduced to its lowest terms, in which two "premises" lead to a "conclusion." For example:

All men are mortal;
I am a man;
Therefore, I am mortal.

The syllogism of the story-teller is, of course, pure nonsense.

Questions and Topics for Study.

Write a short theme on one of the following topics:

- a. The Village Junto.
- b. School-teaching in Sleepy Hollow.
- c. A Riverside Farm-house.

Describe a person with whom you are familiar, using methods similar to those employed in Rip Van Winkle and The Legend of Sleepy Hollow.

In writing a theme about the Dutch settlements along the Hudson River, what help would you secure (a) from your school history, and (b) from Irving's stories?

PHILIP OF POKANOKET.

It has been said that Irving was a story-teller rather than a historian. This sketch offers a fair test of the truth of the statement: he is more interested throughout, one can see, in the narrative qualities of the facts than in the facts themselves. Hence we find here some material which does not bear directly on the subject. He was handicapped, perhaps, because he was writing at second hand — others had told the same story before him. With the present essay should be compared another of similar nature — Traits of Indian Character. Both arouse our interest and sympathy rather than our intellectual approval.

PAGE

- | | |
|----|--|
| 79 | sachems: chiefs, rulers. |
| 80 | sagamore: Indian of high rank — the word has about the same significance as "sachem." |
| 83 | a nice enquirer: close, or exact. |
| 85 | mauraudings: forays, expeditions for plunder. |
| 86 | chimeras: horrible stories. The Chimera was a fabulous beast, part lion, part goat, and part dragon. |
| 89 | toils: snares, ambushes. |
| | perplexed with thickets: an unusual but effective phrase descriptive of tangled woodland. |
| | lugubrious hemlocks: melancholy, gloomy. |
| | wafted themselves: sailed. |
| 90 | ubiquity: the quality of being everywhere at once. |
| | necromancy: magic. |
| 95 | suborned: won over by bribery. |

PAGE

- 96 starved: killed. Originally, "starve" meant "die"; it is now used only of death from hunger.
- 98 shot through the heart: King Philip was slain on August 12, 1676.

Questions and Topics for Study.

Discuss the questions at issue between King Philip and the Colonists. Which side do you think was in the right?

Compare Irving's methods (a) as a story-teller and (b) as an historian. Which do you consider the more effective?

Find some instances of the treatment of the Indians (a) by the Colonists, (b) by the United States Government.

Books on Patriotic Subjects

I AM AN AMERICAN

By SARA CONE BRYANT (Mrs. Theodore F. Borst).

"Americanism," says Mrs. Borst, "needs to be taught as definitely as do geography and arithmetic. The grade teachers are doing splendid work for patriotism, with songs and recitations, story-telling, and talks on civic virtues. I have tried to give them something more definite and coördinated, something that will serve as a real textbook on 'Being an American.'"

STORIES OF PATRIOTISM.

Edited by NORMA H. DEMING and KATHARINE I. BEMIS.

A series of stirring tales of patriotic deeds by Americans from the time of the colonists to the present. There are also stories about famous heroes of our Allies in the Great War.

THE PATRIOTIC READER.

Edited by KATHARINE I. BEMIS, MATHILDE E. HOLTZ, and HENRY L. SMITH.

The selections cover the history of our country from Colonial times. A distinguishing feature is the freshness of material and the admirable arrangement. The book gives one a familiarity with literature that presents the highest ideals of freedom, justice, and liberty.

THE LITTLE BOOK OF THE FLAG.

By EVA MARCH TAPPAN.

In her own entertaining style, Miss Tappan has written the story of Our Flag. She tells children how to behave toward the flag in a fashion that makes such behavior a sacred duty. There are selections for Reading and Memorizing.

A COURSE IN CITIZENSHIP AND PATRIOTISM.

Edited by E. L. CABOT, F. F. ANDREWS, F. E. COE, M. HILL, and M. McSKIMMON.

Good citizenship grows out of love of country and in turn promotes the spirit of internationalism. This book teaches how to develop these qualities most effectually.

AMERICANIZATION AND CITIZENSHIP.

By HANSON HART WEBSTER.

"Well calculated to inculcate love for America, especially among the foreign born. This is to be desired at this time more than ever before." — His Eminence, James Cardinal Gibbons.

HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY

1932

THE TAPPAN-KENDALL HISTORIES

By EVA MARCH TAPPAN, Ph.D., and CALVIN N. KENDALL, LL D.

Book I. American Hero Stories. (For Grades IV-V.) :

By EVA MARCH TAPPAN.

A logical introduction to Miss Tappan's An Elementary History of Our Country. The stories are chronologically arranged and appealingly told.

Book II. An Elementary History of Our Country. (For Grades V-VI.)

By EVA MARCH TAPPAN.

A short, connected, and interesting story of the course of events in our history since the discovery of America. The narrative is simple, and makes a special appeal through its anecdotes of great men. There are numerous stimulating suggestions for written work.

Book III. Our European Ancestors. (For Grade VI.)

By EVA MARCH TAPPAN.

The historical bond of union between Europe and America is adequately developed in this book. In every detail the book follows the course in history laid down for the sixth grade by the Committee of Eight of the American Historical Association.

Book IV. History of the United States for Grammar Schools. (For Grades VII-VIII.)

By REUBEN GOLD THWAITES, LL.D., and CALVIN N. KENDALL, LL.D.

There is an adequate and up-to-date account of our social and industrial development, and authoritative chapters on the Great War. This history combines accurate scholarship, unusual interest, and a most complete and helpful teaching equipment.

TIMELY BOOKS OF PATRIOTIC INTEREST

I Am An American. (For Grades V-VI.)

By SARA CONE BRYANT (Mrs. Theodore F. Borst)

Stories of Patriotism. (For Grades V-VI.)

Compiled by NORMA H. DEMING and KATHARINE I. BEMIS

The Patriotic Reader. (For Grades VII-VIII and Junior High Schools.)

Compiled by K. I. BEMIS, M. E. HOLTZ, and H. L. SMITH, Ph.D.

The Little Book of the Flag. (For Grades VI, VII, VIII.)

By EVA MARCH TAPPAN .

The Little Book of the War. (For Grades VII-VIII and Junior High Schools.)

By EVA MARCH TAPPAN

American Ideals. (For High Schools.)

Edited by NORMAN FOERSTER and W. W. PIERSON, JR.

Liberty, Peace, and Justice. (For High Schools.)

Speeches and Addresses on Democracy and Patriotism, 1776-1918. Riverside Literature Series, No. 261

A Treasury of War Poetry. (For High Schools.)

British and American Poems of the World War. Edited by GEORGE HERBERT CLARKE. Riverside Literature Series, No. 262

Americanization and Citizenship.

Lessons in Community and National Ideals for New Americans. By HANSON HART WEBSTER

HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY

GEOGRAPHICAL READERS

Home Life Around the World.

By GEORGE A. MIRICK. With illustrations from photographs by BURTON HOLMES.

The Twins Series of Geographical Readers.

By LUCY FITCH PERKINS. Illustrated by the author.

The Dutch Twins Primer. — The Eskimo Twins. — The Dutch Twins. — The Japanese Twins. — The Irish Twins. — The Mexican Twins. — The Belgian Twins. — The French Twins. — The Italian Twins. — The Scotch Twins.

Representative Cities of the United States.

By CAROLINE W. HOTCHKISS. Grades VII and VIII. Illustrated.

The British Isles.

By EVERETT T. TOMLINSON. Grades VII and VIII. Illustrated

INDUSTRIAL READERS

America at Work.

By JOSEPH HUSBAND.

The Industrial Readers.

By EVA MARCH TAPPAN. Illustrated.

The Farmer and His Friends. — Diggers in the Earth. — Makers of Many Things. — Travelers and Traveling.

HISTORICAL READERS

The Twins Series of Historical Readers.

By LUCY FITCH PERKINS. Illustrated by the author.

The Cave Twins. — The Spartan Twins. — The Puritan Twins.

History Readers.

By EVA MARCH TAPPAN. Illustrated.

The Story of the Greek People. — The Story of the Roman People. — Old World Hero Stories. — Our European Ancestors. — Letters from Colonial Children. — American Hero Stories. — The Little Book of the War.

Heroes Every Child Should Know.

Edited by HAMILTON WRIGHT MABIE. Illustrated.

Dramatized Scenes from American History.

By AUGUSTA STEVENSON. Grades VI-VIII. Illustrated.

HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY

HIGH SCHOOL ENGLISH

SHORT STORIES OF AMERICA

By ROBERT L. RAMSAY, Professor of English, University of Missouri.

The material is unhackneyed. Only one of the stories here reprinted, we believe, is included in any similar collection. The workmanship is of high excellence. The stories are all of the best quality and are written by authors whose rank is recognized by all critics.

It is a well-rounded collection. Although all the stories are classed as local color stories, they are not merely that, but supply also excellent illustrations of the most skillful handling of plot, character and atmosphere.

ENGLISH FOR SECONDARY SCHOOLS

By W. F. WEBSTER, Principal of the East High School, Minneapolis, Minnesota.

This is a book for first and second year high-school pupils. It expresses well the newer motive in the teaching of English — less memorizing and more doing; less stress upon the rhetorical term — more stress upon the larger qualities of good composition.

PRACTICAL ENGLISH COMPOSITION. In Four Books.

By EDWIN L. MILLER, Principal of the Northwestern High School, Detroit, Michigan.

This series is designed to teach English composition as expressed in letter writing, journalism, expository writing, and argumentation.

THE BUSINESS LETTER

By ION E. DWYER, Principal Bristol County Business School, Taunton, Mass.

This book covers enough of the field of correspondence to give the student an excellent working knowledge of the subject.

PRACTICAL BUSINESS ENGLISH

By OSCAR C. GALLAGHER, Superintendent of Schools, Brookline, Mass., and LEONARD B. MOULTON, High School of Commerce, Boston.

A live, up-to-date text on English as used in the business world. The psychological side of letter-writing is emphasized. Adequate suggestions for class work are given.

MODERN PROSE AND POETRY FOR SECONDARY SCHOOLS

Edited by MARGARET ASHMUN, formerly Instructor in English in the University of Wisconsin.

These selections are taken from volumes most of which have not hitherto been accessible to high-school classes.

PROSE LITERATURE FOR SECONDARY SCHOOLS

With some suggestions for correlation with Composition

Edited by MARGARET ASHMUN. With an Introduction by WILLARD G. BLEYER, Assistant Professor of Journalism in the University of Wisconsin.

The selections in this book cover a wide field, and make an immediate appeal to students of high-school age. The suggestions for study, questions, and notes are all practical and helpful.

THE HIGH SCHOOL PRIZE SPEAKER

Edited by WILLIAM L. SNOW.

The forty-five selections from literature comprising this book have been winners in the Prize Speaking Contest of the Brookline (Mass.) High School.

Houghton Mifflin Company

TRANSLATIONS

WRIGHT (Editor)—Masterpieces of Greek Literature. In translation. 456 pages.

BRYANT—Homer's The Iliad. Translated into English blank verse. Abridged to conform to the college entrance requirements in English. With Map, Pronouncing Vocabulary, Suggestions for Study, etc. Riverside Literature Series, No. 243.

BRYANT—Homer's The Odyssey. Translated into English blank verse. With Map and Pronouncing Vocabulary. Students' Edition.

PALMER—Homer's The Odyssey. Revised Edition. Translated into English prose. With an Introduction, Portrait Bust, Maps, and Outlines, Questions, and Suggestions. Riverside Literature Series, No. 180.

MORE—Æschylus, Prometheus Bound. Translated into English prose. With an Introduction and Notes.

MORE—Plato's The Judgment of Socrates: The Apology, Crito, Closing Scene of the Phædo. Translated into English prose. Riverside Literature Series, No. 129.

PALMER—Sophocles' Antigone. Translated into English prose. With an Introduction and Notes.

Greek Leaders. A supplementary text comprising eleven biographies, for use in high school classes in ancient history. By LESLIE W. HOPKINSON, under the editorship of WILLIAM S. FERGUSON, Professor of Ancient History, Harvard University.

LAING (Editor)—Masterpieces of Latin Literature. In translation. 496 pages.

WILLIAMS—Virgil's The Æneid. Translated into English blank verse. With Introduction, Illustrations, and Pronouncing Vocabulary. Riverside Literature Series, No. 193.

CRANCH—Virgil's The Æneid. Translated into English blank verse. Students' Edition.

HARRIS—Seneca's Medea, and The Daughters of Troy. Translated into English verse. With an Introduction.

NORTON—Dante's Divine Comedy. Complete Edition, three volumes in one. Translated into English prose. With Introduction and Notes.

HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY

The Dallas Lore Sharp Nature Series

- I. THE FALL OF THE YEAR
- II. WINTER
- III. THE SPRING OF THE YEAR
- IV. SUMMER

BY

DALLAS LORE SHARP

*Author of "The Face of the Fields,"
"The Lay of the Land," etc.*

Illustrated by ROBERT BRUCE HORSFALL

Because of the personal, intimate touch and the numerous episodes revealing the author's sincere enjoyment of nature, boys and girls will read these books with increasing delight and be much the richer for the reading.

Teachers may be assured that Mr. Sharp's natural history is authentic, for he is an enemy to all "nature-faking." His reputation as a nature writer is second only to John Burroughs's.

In these books, his aim is to inspire a real love for and interest in nature on the part of school children.

Throughout the books are chapters on "Things to See," "Things to Do," and "Things to Hear." These, with the full Notes and Suggestions to the Teacher and for the Pupil, make a very helpful classroom equipment.

HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY

1948

PRACTICAL ENGLISH COMPOSITION

In Four Books

By EDWIN L. MILLER

Principal of the Northwestern High School Detroit, Michigan

This series marks a radical departure in methods of teaching English. It is flexible, direct, and informal. In line with the modern tendency in education, it emphasizes the practical aspect, the why of learning to write and to speak good English. Original work is encouraged in both teacher and pupils, and especial attention is given to training in oral composition.

While designed for independent use in the four years of the high school, the books will admirably supplement a formal treatise on rhetoric and composition.

Book I Teaches the freshman how to write a correct, coherent, readable letter, how to speak fluent, graceful, precise English, how to gather material and criticise his own work, and begins the study of description.

Book II Reviews description, teaches the sophomore the fundamentals of narration through news writing, and takes up advertisement writing.

Book III Begins advanced composition in the junior year, deals with various methods of narration and description, and takes up exposition in detail.

Book IV Reviews exposition and develops the subject of argumentation—oration and debating—in the senior year.

The author has devoted several years to the perfection of the plan embodied in this series. Not only has he succeeded in rounding out a live course of English instruction from the teacher's point of view, but he has presented each chapter in such a way that the pupil realizes its importance to him.

HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY

RIVERSIDE LITERATURE SERIES

(Continued)

149. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
150. Ouida's Dog of Flanders, etc.
151. Ewing's Jackanapes, etc.
152. Martineau's The Peasant and the Prince.
153. Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream.
154. Shakespeare's Tempest.
155. Irving's Life of Goldsmith.
156. Tennyson's Gareth and Lynette, etc.
157. The Song of Roland.
158. Malory's Merlin and Sir Balin.
159. Beowulf.
160. Spenser's Faerie Queene. Book I.
161. Dickens's Tale of Two Cities.
162. Prose and Poetry of Cardinal Newman.
163. Shakespeare's Henry V.
164. De Quincey's Joan of Arc, etc.
165. Scott's Quentin Durward.
166. Carlyle's Heroes and Hero-Worship.
167. Longfellow's Autobiographical Poems.
168. Shelley's Poems.
169. Lowell's My Garden Acquaintance, etc.
170. Lamb's Essays of Elia.
- 171, 172. Emerson's Essays.
173. Kate Douglas Wiggin's Flag-Raising.
174. Kate Douglas Wiggin's Finding a Home.
175. Whittier's Autobiographical Poems.
176. Burroughs's Afoot and Afloat.
177. Bacon's Essays.
178. Selections from John Ruskin.
179. King Arthur Stories from Malory.
180. Palmer's Odyssey.
181. Goldsmith's The Good-Natured Man.
182. Goldsmith's She Stoops to Conquer.
183. Old English and Scottish Ballads.
184. Shakespeare's King Lear.
185. Moores's Life of Lincoln.
186. Thoreau's Camping in the Maine Woods.
- 187, 188. Huxley's Autobiography, and Essays.
189. Byron's Childe Harold, Canto IV, etc.
190. Washington's Farewell Address, and Webster's Bunker Hill Oration.
191. The Second Shepherds' Play, etc.
192. Mrs. Gaskell's Cranford.
193. Williams's Æneid.
194. Irving's Bracebridge Hall. Selections.
195. Thoreau's Walden.
196. Sheridan's The Rivals.
197. Parton's Captains of Industry. Selected.
- 198, 199. Macaulay's Lord Clive and W. Hastings.
200. Howells's The Rise of Silas Lapham.
201. Harris's Little Mr. Thimblefinger Stories.
202. Jewett's The Night Before Thanksgiving.
203. Shumway's Nibelungenlied.
204. Sheffield's Old Testament Narrative.
205. Powers's A Dickens Reader.
206. Goethe's Faust. Part I.
207. Cooper's The Spy.
208. Aldrich's Story of a Bad Boy.
209. Warner's Being a Boy.
210. Wiggin's Polly Oliver's Problem.
211. Milton's Areopagitica, etc.
212. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.
213. Hemingway's Le Morte Arthur
214. Moores's Life of Columbus.
215. Bret Harte's Tennessee's Partner, etc.
216. Udall's Ralph Roister Doister.
217. Austin's Standish of Standish, Dramatized.
218. Selected Lyrics from Wordsworth, Keats, and Shelley.
219. Selected Lyrics from Dryden, Collins, Gray, Cowper, and Burns.
220. Southern Poems.
221. Macaulay's Speeches on Copyright; Lincoln's Cooper Union Address.
222. Briggs's College Life.
223. Selections from the Prose Writings of Matthew Arnold.
224. Perry's American Mind and American Idealism.
225. Newman's University Subjects.
226. Burroughs's Studies in Nature and Literature.
227. Bryce's Promoting Good Citizenship.
228. Selected English Letters.
229. Jewett's Play-Day Stories.
230. Grenfell's Adrift on an Ice-Pan.
231. Muir's Stickeen.
232. Wiggin's The Birds' Christmas Carol.
233. Tennyson's Idylls. (Selected.)
234. Selected Essays.
235. Briggs's To College Girls.
236. Lowell's Literary Essays. (Selected.)
238. Short Stories.
239. Selections from American Poetry.
240. Howells's The Sleeping Car, and The Parlor Car.
241. Mills's Story of a Thousand-Year Pine, etc.
242. Eliot's Training for an Effective Life.
243. Bryant's Iliad. Abridged Edition.
244. Lockwood's English Sonnets.
245. Antin's At School in the Promised Land.
246. Shepard's Shakespeare Questions.
247. Muir's The Boyhood of a Naturalist.
248. Boswell's Life of Johnson.
249. Palmer's Self-Cultivation in English, and The Glory of the Imperfect.
250. Sheridan's The School for Scandal.
251. Sir Gawain and the Green Knight, and Piers the Ploughman.
252. Howells's A Modern Instance.
253. Helen Keller's The Story of My Life.
254. Rittenhouse's The Little Book of Modern Verse.
255. Rittenhouse's The Little Book of American Poets.
256. Richards's High Tide.
257. Kipling Stories and Poems Every Child Should Know, Book I.
258. Kipling Stories and Poems Every Child Should Know, Book II.
259. Burroughs's The Wit of a Duck, etc.
260. Irving's Tales from the Alhambra.
261. Liberty, Peace, and Justice.
262. A Treasury of War Poetry.
263. Peabody's The Piper.
264. Wiggin's Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm.
265. Aldrich's Marjorie Daw, Goliath, etc.
266. Sharp's Ways of the Woods.
267. Rittenhouse's The Second Book of Modern Verse.
268. Drinkwater's Abraham Lincoln.
269. Wordsworth: Selections. Arnold: Essay on Wordsworth.
270. Burroughs's Nature Near Home, etc.
271. Mills's Being Good to Bears, etc.

RIVERSIDE LITERATURE

(Continued)

EXTRA NUMBERS

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

- C Warriner's Teaching of English Classics in the Grades.
- F Longfellow Leaflets.
- G Whittier Leaflets.
- H Holmes Leaflets.
- I Thomas's How to Teach English Classics.
- J Holbrook's Northland Heroes.
- K Minimum College Requirements in English for Study.
- L The Riverside Song Book.
- M Lowell's Fable for Critics.
- N Selections from American Authors.
- O Lowell Leaflets.
- P Holbrook's Hiawatha Primer.
- Q Selections from English Authors.
- R Hawthorne's Twice-Told Tales. Selected.
- S Irving's Essays from Sketch Book. Selected.
- T Literature for the Study of Language.
- U A Dramatization of the Song of Hiawatha.
- V Holbrook's Book of Nature Myths.
- W Brown's In the Days of Giants.
- X Poems for the Study of Language.

- Y
- Z
- AA Coleridge's The Ancient Mariner and Lowell's The Vision of Sir Launfal.
- BB Poe's The Raven, Whittier's Snow-Bound, and Longfellow's The Courtship of Miles Standish.
- CC Selections for Study and Memorizing.
- DD Sharp's The Year Out-of-Doors.
- EE Poems for Memorizing.
- FF Poems for Reading and Memorizing, Grades I and II.
- GG Poems for Reading and Memorizing, Grade III.
- HH Poems for Reading and Memorizing, Grade IV.
- JJ Poems for Reading and Memorizing, Grade V.
- KK Poems for Reading and Memorizing, Grade VI.
- LL Selections for Reading and Memorizing, Grade VII.
- MM Selections for Reading and Memorizing, Grade VIII.

LIBRARY BINDING

- | | |
|--|--|
| <ul style="list-style-type: none"> 135-136. Chaucer's Prologue, The Knight's Tale. 168. Shelley's Poems. Selected. 177. Bacon's Essays. 181-182. Goldsmith's Plays. 187-188. Huxley's Autobiography and Essays. 191. Second Shepherds' Play, etc. 211. Milton's Areopagitica, etc. 216. Ralph Roister Doister. 222. Briggs's College Life. 223. Matthew Arnold's Prose Selections. 224. Perry's The American Mind, etc. 225. Newman's University Subjects. 226. Burroughs's Studies in Nature and Literature. 227. Bryce's Promoting Good Citizenship. 235. Briggs's To College Girls. 236. Lowell's Selected Literary Essays. | <ul style="list-style-type: none"> 242. Eliot's The Training for an Effective Life. 244. Lockwood's English Sonnets. 246. Shepard's Shakespeare Questions. 248. Boswell's Life of Johnson. Abridged. 250. Sheridan's The School for Scandal. 251. Sir Gawain and the Green Knight, and Piers the Ploughman. 252. Howells's A Modern Instance. 254. Rittenhouse's The Little Book of Modern Verse. 255. Rittenhouse's The Little Book of American Poets. 256. Richards's High Tide. 267. Rittenhouse's Second Book of Modern Verse. 268. Drinkwater's Abraham Lincoln. K. Minimum College Requirements in English for Study. |
|--|--|

Complete Catalogue and Price List free upon application.

HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

0 016 117 712 A

